I. DEFINITION AND CLASSIFICATION.

A. In General. A contempt is a wilful disregard or disobedience of a public authority.¹

B. Contempt of Court — 1. IN GENERAL. A contempt of court is disobedience to the court, by acting in opposition to the authority, justice, and dignity thereof.² Contempts may be direct³ or constructive,⁴ criminal⁵ or civil.⁶

2. DIRECT CONTEMPT. A direct contempt is an open insult in the presence⁷ of the court to the person of the presiding judge, or a resistance or defiance in his presence to its powers or authority.⁸

1. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in In re MacKnight, 11 Mont. 126, 135, 27 Pac. 336, 28 Am. St. Rep. 451].

Other definitions are: "Disobedience or disregard of authority." Burrill L. Dict.

"Disobedience to, or interruption of, the orders or proceedings of a court or legislative body." Abbott L. Dict.

"A wilful disregard of the authority of a court or legislature." Anderson L. Dict. [quoted in In re MacKnight, 11 Mont. 126, 135, 27 Pac. 336, 28 Am. St. Rep. 451].

"A wilful disregard of the authority of a court of justice, or legislative body, or disobedience to its lawful orders." Black L. Dict.

2. Miller v. Knox, 4 Bing. N. Cas. 574, 6 Scott 1, 33 E. C. L. 865; Pract. Reg. 99 [quoted in Conover v. Wood, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 84, 89]; 2 Swift Dig. 358 [quoted in Lyon v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 185, 199]; Viner Abrit, Contempt.

Other definitions are: "A despising of the authority, justice or dignity of the court." Dahnke v. People, 168 Ill. 102, 107, 48 N. E. 137, 39 L. R. A. 197.

"Disregard of the authority of the court." In re MacKnight, 11 Mont. 126, 135, 27 Pac. 336, 28 Am. St. Rep. 451.

"An offence against the court as an organ of justice." Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 6 Am. Dec. 290 [quoted in State v. Frew, 24 W. Va. 416, 448, 49 Am. Rep. 257].

"Any wilful disregard of the authority of the court, rightfully exercised." Powell v. State, 48 Ala. 154, 156.

"Any conduct that tends to bring the authority and administration of the law into disrespect or disregard, or to interfere with or prejudice parties litigant or their witnesses during the litigation." 3 Encyc. Laws Eng. p. 313.

Contempt of court involves two ideas: contempt of its power and contempt of its authority — the word "power" involving the ability to enforce obedience to its orders, and the word "authority" its jurisdiction to declare the law, and the rights of the parties. 3 Encyc. Laws Eng. p. 313.

To be in contempt is to be in the condition of one who has committed a contempt of court and has not purged himself. Haldane v. Eckford, L. R. 7 Eq. 425, 38 L. J. Ch. 372, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 389, 17 Wkly. Rep. 570.

3. See infra, I, B, 2.

In courts of equity contempts were formerly classified as ordinary and extraordinary. U. S. v. Anonymous, 21 Fed. 761. In modern times they are usually called civil and criminal. Wellesley v. Beaufort, 2 Russ. & M. 639, 11 Eng. Ch. 639.

4. See infra, I, B, 3.

5. See infra, I, B, 4.

6. See infra, I, B, 5.

7. As to what constitutes "in the presence" of the court see infra, III, J, 2.

8. Illinois.—Holbrook v. Ford, 153 Ill. 633, 39 N. E. 1091, 46 Am. St. Rep. 917, 27 L. R. A. 324; Kyle v. People, 72 Ill. App. 171.

Indiana.—Dodge v. State, 140 Ind. 284, 39 N. E. 745; Stewart v. State, 140 Ind. 7, 39 N. E. 508; Little v. State, 90 Ind. 338, 46 Am. Rep. 224; Ex p. Wright, 65 Ind. 504; Whittem v. State, 36 Ind. 196.

Kansas.—State v. Anders, 64 Kan. 742, 68 Pac. 668; State v. Henthorn, 46 Kan. 613, 26

3. CONSTRUCTIVE CONTEMPT. A constructive contempt is an act done not in the presence of the court, but at a distance which tends to belittle, to degrade, or to obstruct, interrupt, prevent, or embarrass the administration of justice.⁹

4. CRIMINAL CONTEMPT. A criminal contempt is conduct that is directed against the dignity and authority of the court.¹⁰

5. CIVIL CONTEMPT. Civil contempt consists in failing to do something ordered to be done by a court in a civil action for the benefit of the opposing party therein.¹¹

II. NATURE OF OFFENSE.

Acts punishable as criminal contempts are in the nature of crimes, in that they involve the idea of punishment as a penalty for the commission of unauthorized acts.¹²

2. ORDER TO PAY MONEY.²⁵ In view of constitutional or statutory provisions forbidding imprisonment for debt,²⁶ some courts have held that disobedience to an order to pay money pursuant to a judgment or decree, or an order in the nature of a judgment or decree cannot be punished as a contempt.²⁷ Other authorities are to the effect that, although an order for the payment of money generally cannot be enforced by contempt proceedings, an order for the payment of a specific fund in the possession or under the control of the person may be so enforced.²⁸ fact that the order is in part void does not justify violation of the valid parts thereof.³¹

b. Entry of Order. In order to be valid the order must have been actually made or the judgment or decree rendered and duly entered of record.³²

c. Erroneous Judgment or Order. The fact that the mandate, order, or judgment is merely erroneous is no excuse for violating it, where the court possessed jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties litigant.³³ So the fact that the order was improvidently granted or irregularly obtained will not excuse disobedience.³⁴

d. Uncertain or Indefinite Order. In order to be valid and binding the order must be certain or definite in its terms. The charge of contempt cannot be established for failure to comply with uncertain or indefinite orders, judgments, or mandates.³⁵ A court order is not uncertain or indefinite, however, because it is alternative in form.³⁶

4. CHANGE OF CONDITIONS AFTER ISSUANCE OF ORDER. Change of conditions subsequent to the making of a court order may constitute sufficient justification for disregarding such order.³⁷

Intention to make order.—The court has no jurisdiction to punish as a contempt an act of disobedience to an order which the court intended to make, but which in fact was never entered. Ex p. Buskirk, 72 Fed. 14, 18 C. C. A. 410.

Improper designation.—Refusal to deliver property to a receiver where the property is not properly designated is not contempt. Casselear v. Simons, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 273.

Omission from order.—Failure to deliver property to receiver is not contempt where order omits such direction. McKelsey v. Lewis, 3 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 61. See also Tinkey v. Langdon, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 180. So an order directing the assignee for the benefit of creditors to distribute funds among the creditors, after deducting certain amounts for specific purposes, is uncertain where it fails to specify the amount to be paid each creditor. Ross v. Butler, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 110, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 444, 32 N. Y. St. 212, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 152.

36. In re Morris, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 167.

Date of order.—A sheriff is not excused from levying an execution because of the fact that it is not dated. State v. Brophy, 38 Wis. 413. So the fact that a decree recited the wrong date of its rendition is no excuse for non-compliance as such mistake could not mislead. Craig v. McCullough, 20 W. Va. 148.

37. In Glover v. Board of Education, 14 S. D. 139, 84 N. W. 761, a mandamus was issued to a board of education directing it to admit a pupil whom it had suspended for failure to comply with its order requiring vaccination. At the time the court order was issued it appeared that there was no smallpox in the city and hence the order of the board of education was without justification as a sanitary measure. On the day the pupil was admitted to the school in compliance with the writ, the board being officially notified by the state and county health boards that smallpox was then prevalent in the vicinity of the city, again suspended such pupil until such time as he should present proof of vaccination. It was held that the subsequent suspension did not subject the board to contempt, as in violation of such right, since on such emergency arising after the pupil's readmittance the board was justi-judgment, or decree by appeal, writ of error, certiorari, or other authorized proceeding, and such step amounts to a supersedeas, it is not contempt to refuse to act under the order of the trial court.³⁸ On the other hand any attempt to carry out the order during the pendency of the proceedings for review will be adjudged contempt.³⁹ If, however, the action to review does not operate as a supersedeas, execution of the order of the court of first instance is not suspended during the pendency of the proceedings.⁴⁰

6. DEMAND OF PERFORMANCE. Generally, before one can be punished for contempt in neglecting to comply with an order of court to pay over money or turn over property, there must be a demand for the money or the property.⁴¹

7. NOTICE OF ORDER. In order to punish a person for contempt of court for violation of an order, judgment, or decree of court, it must appear that such order, judgment, or decree has been personally served on the one charged,⁴² or fied in suspending him during the continuance of the epidemic until he complied with the reasonable regulation of vaccination.

As to operation of appeal or writ of error as a supersedeas see APPEAL AND ERROR, VIII, F [2 Cyc. 889].

Knowledge of appeal and supersedeas.—In quo warranto proceedings to test the title to an office the relator was given title by the trial court and thereafter an appeal and supersedeas was issued. Relator, without knowledge of the appeal and supersedeas, broke into the office and assumed the duties. He was held not to be in contempt. Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 18 S. Ct. 435, 42 L. ed. 865. See also Reg. v. Wood-yatt, 27 Ont. 113, holding that a magistrate who without knowledge of the issuance of a writ of certiorari enforced a conviction by the issue of a distress warrant was not in contempt.

By whom demand made.—Under an order of court directing the delivery of property to a receiver the demand to comply therewith should be made by the receiver personally. Panton v. Zebley, 19 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 394.

No formal demand is necessary for the payment of money ordered, where it appears that defendant had informed complainant that he would not pay. Potts v. Potts, 68 Mich. 492, 36 N. W. 240.

Execution of deed.—Disobeying a decree requiring the execution, acknowledgment, and delivery of a deed is not contempt until the deed has been presented for execution and the party charged has refused to comply with the decree. Berry v. Innes, 35 Mich. 189. And it has been held that to put parties in contempt for disobedience of a decree commanding them to execute an instrument of a certain form, a certified copy of the decree and a copy of the instrument proposed should be served a reasonable time for them to examine, before the peremptory demand for the execution is made. *McBair v. Compliance to extent of ability.—Where it appears that the order of the court has been complied with as far as the party was able to comply he is not in contempt. Clare v. Blakesley, 1 Scott (N. R.) 397, 8 D. P. C. 835, 4 Jur. 992.

If the property can be obtained by the party charged, as papers ordered to be pro-

the party charged cannot obey or perform the thing required.⁴⁵ If the order could have been obeyed when made, the party is in contempt, although at the time of the contempt proceedings, he could not comply.⁴⁶

b. Payment of Money. Inability to comply with an order requiring the payment of money resulting from poverty, insolvency, or other cause not attributable to the fault of the party charged will ordinarily be received as a valid excuse from the consequences of contempt;⁴⁷ but this inability must clearly appear.⁴⁸

F. Fictitious Bail or Security. Giving or providing bond or bail with fictitious sureties,⁴⁹ false justification as surety,⁵⁰ or knowingly furnishing worthduced, disobedience will be held contempt. Tuttle v. Mechanics, etc., Loan Co., 6 Whart. (Pa.) 216.

side of the court-room,⁶¹ expressing opinion respecting the merits of the case,⁶² or separating⁶³ from the other jurors in violation of the court's injunction.

1. MISCONDUCT OF WITNESS—1. IN GENERAL. Witnesses who retire without giving testimony,⁶⁴ or who, having been excluded by order of the court, remain in the court-room during the examination of other witnesses are guilty of contempt.⁶⁵

2. FAILURE OF WITNESS TO APPEAR. Failure of a witness to appear in obedience to the requirements of a legal summons or subpoena, either to give evidence or produce books, papers, etc., is contempt.⁶⁶

3. FALSE SWEARING BY WITNESS. False swearing by a witness has the same effect upon the administration of justice as a refusal to answer proper questions and is a direct contempt of the authority of the court.⁶⁷

4. REFUSAL OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR TO MAKE DISCOVERY. A judgment debtor's refusal to answer questions as to his property when directed by the court so to do may be punished as a contempt.⁶⁸

5. REFUSAL TO TESTIFY OR PRODUCE EVIDENCE. Refusal of a witness to be sworn or affirmed,⁶⁹ or to answer questions in examinations before the court,⁷⁰ grand

61. A juror who acquires information out of the court-room pending a trial is not guilty of contempt if the court has issued no order or injunction in this respect. People v. Oyer, etc., Ct., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 277 [affirmed in 101 N. Y. 245, 4 N. E. 259, 54 Am. Rep. 691].

62. A juror is in contempt if after being summoned he voluntarily forms and delivers an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the person, with a view of disqualifying himself from serving. Such act tends to obstruct the due administration of justice. U. S. v. Devaughan, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,952, 3 Cranch C. C. 84.

ing, or insulting language to the court,⁷⁹ witnesses,⁸⁰ or opposing counsel⁸¹ is contempt.

2. IN PRESENCE OF COURT. Direct contempt⁸² can only be committed in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice.⁸³ Insolent conduct directed toward the court or judge constituting contempt must also occur while the court or judge is engaged in the discharge of a judicial duty.⁸⁴ The court is present, however, in every part of the place set apart for its use and for the use of its officers, jurors, and witnesses, and therefore misbehavior in such places is misconduct in the presence of the court.⁸⁵

3. DISTURBANCE OF PROCEEDINGS OF COURT. One who disturbs the peace and good order of a cause on trial is guilty of a contempt.⁸⁶

IV. PERSONS LIABLE.

A. In General. The power of courts to punish for contempt extends to all persons who interfere with the proper exercise of their judicial functions, whether such persons be officers of the court,¹¹ parties litigant, or strangers.¹² A client will not be held in contempt, however, for acts done by his attorney without his direction, knowledge, privity, or procurement.¹³

B. Corporations. A corporation may commit contempt as well as its officers, members, and agents.¹⁴ Thus where a corporation is ordered to refrain

To terrify a witness about to be examined is contempt. Partridge v. Partridge, Tothill 40.

The use of threatening language to a person who is likely to be a witness in a suit with the purpose of preventing that person from coming forward to give evidence is a contempt. Shaw v. Shaw, 8 Jur. N. S. 141, 31 L. J. P. M. 35, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 477, 2 Swab. & Tr. 517.

Until witness has been subpoenaed or subpoena has been issued for him, it is not contempt to induce him to absent himself so he could not be subpoenaed. McConnell v. State, 46 Ind. 298. See also Schlesinger v. Flersheim, 2 D. & L. 737, 14 L. J. Q. B. 97. So subpoenas issued in blank as to names of parties to the case is not a valid process upon which to prosecute a rule for contempt charging one with attempt to bribe another to warn witness to avoid the service of such subpoena. Dobbs v. State, 55 Ga. 272. But to keep a material witness out of the way and thereby impede the service of a subpoena is a contempt. Clements v. Williams, 2 Scott 814. And removing a person so that he could not be subpoenaed after the subpoena has been issued and in the hands of the sheriff is contempt. Haskett v. State, 51 Ind. 176.

See, generally, CORPORATIONS; and 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contempt," § 87.

When the manager of a corporation directs a thing to be done and has full charge thereof he alone will be held for contempt, and it is not necessary to make the company in name from doing a particular thing every member of the corporation who afterward joins in doing the forbidden act may be held in contempt.¹⁵

C. Officers of Court. Officers of court,¹⁶ such as attorneys,¹⁷ clerks,¹⁸ court depositaries,¹⁹ officers in charge of witnesses under rule,²⁰ receivers,²¹ or sheriffs,²² are punishable for contempts committed by them. But an official error made in good faith, not being wilful disobedience to the order of court, is not contempt.²³ guardians,²⁶ trustees,²⁷ referees,²⁸ etc., may be punished for contempt for failure to properly perform the trust imposed upon them.

V. DEFENSES.²⁹

A. Advice of Counsel. Acting under advice of counsel is no defense to a proceeding for contempt.³⁰ Such fact may, however, be considered by the court in mitigation of the offense.³¹

B. Advice or Consent of Complainant. Where the contempt charged is the result of the advice or consent, direct or implied, of complainant, this is a sufficient justification.³²

C. Change of Conditions. The intervention of rights arising subsequent to the passing of the order and the rendition of the judgment which fixes the former right will sometimes excuse disobedience to such order or judgment.³³

D. Ignorance of Law. As a general rule ignorance of the law will not operate as an excuse in a charge of contempt.³⁴ But where the criminality of an act depends alone upon the intention with which it was done, the ignorance of the party charged is an element to be considered in ascertaining the question of guilt.³⁵

E. Want of Intention. Disclaimer of intentional disrespect or design to embarrass the due administration of justice is as a rule no excuse, especially where the facts constituting the contempt are admitted or where a contempt is clearly apparent from the circumstances surrounding the commission of the act.³⁶

K. Effect of Appeal. Where an appeal has been taken to a higher court and such court obtains jurisdiction, all contempts committed thereafter relating to such proceeding are punishable by the latter court, but where the steps to have the proceeding reviewed do not constitute a stay or supersedeas and the jurisdiction remains in the trial court, the latter court possesses power to punish contempts growing out of the proceeding.⁵⁹

L. Existence of Other Remedies—1. IN GENERAL. Some courts will not punish for contempt if there is another remedy to enforce obedience to their orders.⁶⁰ Other courts hold that the existence of other remedies does not take away their power to punish for contempt.⁶¹

2. PUNISHMENT AS CRIMINAL OFFENSE. In the absence of constitutional or statutory restriction, the fact that the contempt is also a crime or misdemeanor, and that the offender can be proceeded against by information or indictment does not take away the power to punish for contempt.⁶²

Remedy by action.—A sheriff cannot be punished for contempt, for a mistake in the discharge of his official duty, as the party injured can hold him and his surety liable in damages. Oswego Second Nat. Bank v. Dunn, 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 434. So attachment for contempt will not issue against one who has dispossessed the sheriff of property seized on final process, since he has a remedy by action against the dispossessor. *People v. Montana.—State v. Faulds, 17 Mont. 140, 42 Pac. 285.

M. Former Adjudication. Where the matter of contempt has been finally adjudicated and defendant discharged,⁶³ or where the former punishment inflicted was unauthorized⁶⁴ he cannot again be tried for the same contempt. But a discharge because the court or judge had no jurisdiction,⁶⁵ or because of illegal arrest⁶⁶ or insufficiency of the affidavit is no bar.⁶⁷ So conviction for the act constituting the contempt as a crime or misdemeanor does not purge the contempt.⁶⁸

N. Pendency of Other Proceedings. The pendency of other proceedings having in view the enforcement of the violated order, judgment, decree, or mandate will not defeat contempt proceedings.⁶⁹

VII. PROCEEDINGS TO PUNISH.

A. Nature of Proceedings — 1. IN GENERAL. As a rule a proceeding for contempt is regarded as collateral to the cause in which the contempt arises and independent of the main action.⁷⁰ There are cases, however, which hold that a for the purpose of protecting or enforcing private rights are remedial and civil in their nature.⁷³

B. Who May Institute. Proceedings for contempt to enforce a civil remedy and to protect the right of parties litigant should be instituted by the aggrieved parties, or those who succeed to their rights, or someone who has a pecuniary interest in the right to be protected.⁷⁴ If, however, the purpose of the proceeding is to vindicate the authority of the court and is criminal in its nature the state is the real prosecutor.⁷⁵

C. Change of Venue. A party accused of contempt is not entitled to a change of venue.⁷⁶

D. Laches in Instituting. Lapse of time since the commission of the contempt is not of itself fatal to punishment.⁷⁷ Application to punish should be

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contempt," § 127.

A creditor cannot institute proceedings for contempt against one who unlawfully takes possession of property in the hands of a receiver. Moore v. Mercer Wire Co., (N. J. 1888) 15 Atl. 305. But see Tindel v. Westcott, 113 Ga. 1114, 39 S. E. 450, 55 L. R. A. 225, holding that where a receiver improperly obtains money deposited in a bank under order of the court and appropriates it to his own use a creditor who is entitled to participate in the fund is the proper party to move an attachment against the receiver and in the absence of such motion the judge on information derived from any source should take steps to compel the return of the money.

One of two joint complainants cannot proceed against his co-complainant by attachment for contempt for appropriating more than his share of the proceeds of a decree rendered in their favor. Jones v. Jones, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 3.

Party in default.—Where complainant has failed to fully perform his part of a decree of court he cannot prosecute contempt proceedings against defendant for not obeying the decree. Dowden v. Junker, 48 N. J. Eq. 554, 22 Atl. 727. But plaintiff who has not fully complied with his part of the decree may put himself in position to prosecute defendant for contempt by subsequently doing the acts required of him. Morris v. Walsh, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 636, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 387.

75. State v. Milligan, 4 Wash. 29, 29 Pac. 763; Haight v. Lucia, 36 Wis. 355; Durant v. Washington County, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,191, 1 Woolw. 377.

The court, without complaint, may of its own motion proceed against the offender. Telegram Newspaper Co. v. Com., 172 Mass. 294, 52 N. E. 445, 70 Am. St. Rep. 280, 44 L. R. A. 159.

76. Bloom v. People, 23 Colo. 416, 48 Pac. 519; Crook v. People, 16 Ill. 534; State v. Newton, 62 Ind. 517; People v. Williams, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 102, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 457. But see Lamonte v. Ward, 36 Wis. 558, holding that under the statute which provides for the removal of "any cause or matter" in certain cases, a contempt proceeding may be removed from the county to the circuit court. See also State v. First Judicial Dist. Ct., 52 Minn. 283, 53 N. W. 1157.

In North Dakota the accused is not entitled to have another judge called in to determine the case upon filing affidavits showing the prejudice of the presiding judge. Noble Tp. v. Aasen, 10 N. D. 264, 86 N. W. 742.

77. People v. Rice, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 179, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 345, 56 N. Y. St. 546; In re Hay Foundry, etc., Works, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 87, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 802, 27 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 80; People v. Gilleland, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 555; Brockway v. Wilber, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 356; Dale v. Rosevelt, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 25.

Limitations.—In Illinois it has been held that where the act constituting the contempt is by the terms of the statute made a misdemeanor the prosecution therefor is barred made, however, within a reasonable time.⁷⁸ If injury results from delay the application will be denied.⁷⁹

E. Abatement of Proceedings. If the proceedings in which the contempt arose are abated or finally disposed of ordinarily defendant will be discharged.⁸⁰ It has been held, however, that an attachment for contempt for violating an injunction if commenced before, may be prosecuted after, the injunction is dissolved.⁸¹ It has also been held that the dismissal of a creditor's bill after an interlocutory order has been made does not prevent the enforcement of the interlocutory order by attachment.⁸²

F. Entitlement. No rule as to the proper entitlement of the proceeding is deducible from the authorities. The practice in some jurisdictions is to prosecute a matter of contempt in the cause or proceeding out of which it arose and not as a separate proceeding with a title of its own.⁸³ The practice in other jurisdictions is to entitle the proceeding in the name of the state or people, or in the name of the state or people at the relation of a party.⁸⁴ The logical practice within the period prescribed for misdemeanors. Beattie v. People, 33 Ill. App. 651. But see Cake v. Bird, (Pa. 1888) 15 Atl. 774, holding that it is too late to plead the statute of limitations after the evidence has been taken on both sides and the question considered and decided by the court.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contempt," § 135.

Death of one defendant.—Pending an abatement of a suit by death of one defendant process of contempt may be executed against the other. Brown v. Andrews, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 227.

Expiration of judge's term of office.—Proceedings for contempt do not abate upon the expiration of the term of office of the judge, but may be continued before his successor. Holstein v. Rice, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 307, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 135.

Reversal on appeal.—Where an order for a temporary injunction is reversed an order punishing one for contempt in disobeying such injunction falls with it. Krone v. Kings County El. R. Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 431, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 149, 20 N. Y. St. 780. So on a reversal of an order directing a judgment debtor to deliver certain property to a receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings an order adjudging the debtor guilty of contempt in not delivering the property also falls. Smith v. McQuade, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 63.

Satisfaction of judgment.—Where defendant is in contempt for failure to comply with a judgment, the satisfaction of the judgment is a bar to a prosecution for the contempt. Ex p. Tittel, 67 Cal. 261, 7 Pac. 678. But where the contempt consists in the disregard of a writ of mandamus issued to compel performance, the purchase of the judgment will not relieve from punishment for the contempt in refusing to obey the writ. State v. King, 29 Kan. 607.

81. Crook v. People, 16 Ill. 534. See also Stubbs v. Ripley, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 626, holding that the subsequent settlement and discontinuance of an action begun in disobedience of an injunction does not relieve defendant from liability for his contempt, although it may serve to palliate or mitigate the offense.

to show cause, an attachment, or other process should issue.⁹⁹ The usual course is to issue a rule to show cause why an attachment should not issue.¹ In a proper case, however, an attachment may issue in the first instance without the granting of an order to show cause,² as where all the evidence is before the court and the offense is clear,³ where the case is urgent and the contempt flagrant,⁴ where the proceeding is against a non-resident, and it is shown that he is about to go beyond the court's jurisdiction,⁵ or where the party is present in court, or appears to the rule to show cause why an attachment should not issue and submits to answer interrogatories.⁶

2. SUFFICIENCY — a. Rule to Show Cause. The rule to show cause should inform defendant of the nature of the contempt alleged.⁷ If the statute or rule of court requires it, the facts constituting the contempt should be set out.⁸

b. Attachment. The attachment, to be valid, should be sufficient in form and substance.⁹ It is good, if it shows on its face that it was issued in a proceeding in which the court has jurisdiction,¹⁰ and contains the matters prescribed by statute or rule of court.¹¹

3. SERVICE — a. Rule to Show Cause. As a general rule personal service of the rule to show cause should be made on the party.¹² Under some circumstances, however, service on the party's attorney of record,¹³ or service by leaving

The word "attach" was used in an order to show cause in the place of "punish," and as it did not appear that the defendant was misled the order was held to be sufficient. People v. Kenny, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 346.

Failure to appear before master.—Where the order is to the party to show cause why he should not be punished for failure to obey an order to appear before a master, it should recite sufficient of the alleged contempt to inform him of the misconduct charged. Hammersley v. Parker, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 25, 3 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 344.

Recital of disobeyed order.—An attachment for disobeying an order in supplementary proceedings should recite the order disobeyed. Smith v. Weeks, 60 Wis. 94, 18 N. W. 778.

Showing that prejudice resulted.—An attachment for failure to pay costs is sufficient, although it does not state that the refusal defeated, impaired, or prejudiced the rights of the adverse party. Tucker v. Gilman, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 392, 37 N. Y. St. 958, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 397.

Form of attachment in whole, in part, or in substance is set out in:

On board.—Service of a rule to show cause on a board of assessors should be on the members of the board. State v. Tax Assessors, 53 N. J. L. 156, 20 Atl. 966. But where an order to show cause was filed in the office of the clerk of a board of county canvassers, and was in fact seen and read by the clerk, the objection that it was not personally served is not available. People v. Dutchess County Canvassers, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 329.

Refusal to receive the order to show cause is sufficient proof of a personal demand as required by the statute to authorize the issuance of an attachment for arrest. Graham v. Bleakie, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 55.

Time of service.—The notice must be served in time to give defendant an opportunity to appear on the return-day. Stafford v. Brown, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 360. Service of rule to show cause on defendant twenty days before the return-day and receipt of copy acknowledged is sufficient. People v. Hallett, 3 Ill. 566.

Concealment to prevent service.—Service on attorney of record ordered where defendant concealed himself. Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 52 Pac. 122, 65 Am. St. Rep. 147; Pureka Lake, etc., Canal Co. v. Yuba County Super. Ct., 66 Cal. 311, 5 Pac. 490, 493; Golden Gate Consol Hydraulic Min. Co. v.

a copy at the party's last and usual place of abode will be considered a sufficient service.¹⁴

b. Attachment. Service of an attachment must be made in the manner and within the time provided by statute or required by rule of court.¹⁵

4. RETURN. The attachment is properly made returnable before the judge by whom issued.¹⁶

5. HEARING. Ordinarily where a prima facie case is made, either upon affidavit or other satisfactory proof, the rule nisi is granted as of course.¹⁷ The proof, however, should show the specific acts which constitute the contempt,¹⁸ and that all preliminary steps have been substantially observed.¹⁹ Defendant may controvert the facts set up in the affidavit or motion, or explain, palliate, or set up any legal ground as a reason why the court ought not to award the attachment;²⁰ but the validity of the order disobeyed cannot be assailed if defendant has had an opportunity to be heard upon it.²¹

1. Appearance—1. IN GENERAL. On an order to show cause defendant may appear in person²² or by attorney.²³

No. 12,833, 4 Blatchf. 14, holding that on motion for attachment for violation of an injunction, the objection that it was broader in its terms than the order under which it issued cannot be raised. And for violation of injunction against infringements of patents, proof that the patentee was not the first inventor of the thing cannot be heard. Whipple v. Hutchinson, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,517, 4 Blatchf. 190.

Fictitious nature of suit.—On motion for an attachment for a witness for failure to obey a subpoena to appear and be examined before a commissioner, the question whether the suit in which the deposition is to be used is real or fictitious will not be inquired into. Ex p. Judson, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,561, 3 Blatchf. 89.

The rights of the parties claiming a fund in the hands of a sheriff will not be settled on a motion or attachment against the sheriff for failure to pay over the money. Wilson v. Wright, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 459.

22. In Mississippi it has been held that a party charged with contempt should appear and answer in person and not by attorney. Vertner v. Martin, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 103. See also People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 195, 16 Am. Rep. 528, holding that where a party is under a rule to show cause why an attachment should not issue against him, he should appear in his own proper person if he relies upon excuse only. And see Pitt v. Davison, 37 N. Y. 235 [reversing 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 97].

After being brought into court on attachment a party may be represented by attorney in subsequent proceedings, although not personally present. Watrous v. Kearney, 79 N. Y. 496.

2. AS WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS. Appearing and answering without objection cures irregularities in the commencement of the proceedings.²⁴

J. Arraignment. In the absence of statutory requirement, formal arraignment of defendant is not necessary.²⁵

K. Bail. As a rule one arrested on process for contempt may be admitted to bail.²⁶

L. Interrogatories—1. NECESSITY OF FILING. The authorities bearing upon the matter of filing interrogatories are not uniform in their holdings. At common law and by statute in some jurisdictions interrogatories must be filed except where the offense is admitted.²⁷ Authority is not wanting, however, to the effect that a conviction may be had without filing interrogatories.²⁸ Other authorities hold that interrogatories are not necessary where an opportunity for explanation and defense is given,²⁹ where the contempt is for disobedience of an order to pay money,³⁰ or where the court is in possession of the facts and the alleged contempt is expressly admitted and the defense is merely a question of law.³¹ It has also been held that the court may dispense with an examination on interrogatories where the affidavits of complainant are of such credit as not to be affected by the denial of defendant under oath.³² There is further authority to the effect that a person brought into court for contempt may submit his contempt without interrogatories or he may demand the filing of interrogatories.³³

2. SCOPE. The interrogatories must be limited to those offenses which are set forth in the application for the attachment.³⁴

3. TIME OF FILING. Unless the time for filing interrogatories is provided by statute or rule of court, it may be fixed by order,³⁵ and if they are not filed within the time specified the proceedings may be dismissed.³⁶

4. AMENDMENT. The interrogatories may be amended or additional interrogatories filed for the purpose of explaining an ambiguity and obtaining a fuller answer.³⁷

M. Answer, Plea, or Counter-Affidavit—1. IN GENERAL. The trial for contempt not committed in the presence of the court, if not had on interrogatories,³⁸ may be on answer, plea, counter-affidavit or some form of pleading presented as a defense by the one charged.³⁹

2. CONCLUSIVENESS OF ANSWER. At common law, where the answer of the accused squarely met and denied the alleged contempt, such answer was conclusive and no further evidence could be received, and this rule has been followed in many cases.⁴⁰ Authority, however, is not wanting in support of the chancery rule,⁴¹ which permits inquiry to be made into the truth of the answer filed by the accused.⁴²

N. Evidence — 1. IN GENERAL. In case of a direct contempt the court may determine all the necessary facts without other evidence of what occurred in court than the court's judicial knowledge.⁴³ In case of a contempt not committed in the presence of the court, the evidence admissible should only be such as would be admissible on the trial of an indictment for the same offense.⁴⁴

2. BURDEN OF PROOF. Defendant is entitled to the presumption of innocence and the complainant must prove him guilty.⁴⁵ If, however, an affirmative defense is set up the burden is upon defendant to sustain it.⁴⁶

3. SUFFICIENCY. A clear case of contempt of court must be established by the evidence.⁴⁷ Proceedings in contempt being in their nature criminal in character

Other contempts.—But in the trial of a contempt committed in the presence of the court it is not competent for the judge to take judicial notice of and consider the fact that defendant had been guilty of another contempt of the same court for which he had been tried and found guilty. Myers v. State, 46 Ohio St. 473, 22 N. E. 43, 15 Am. St. Rep. 638. And see William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, 38 Conn. 121, holding that in a proceeding for the violation of a temporary injunction, evidence of other acts of contempt than those charged is in general inadmissible, but may be admitted where the accused seeks to mitigate his offense by showing that he acted under innocent mistake for the purpose of showing the spirit in which the acts charged were committed.

So under a statute requiring the court on adjudging one guilty of contempt, without written accusation, to enter a judgment specifying the conduct constituting the contempt, the language claimed to be insulting and scandalous should be set out in the judgment, and the designation that it was "insulting and scandalous" is not sufficient. In re Elliott, 9 Kan. b. Alternative Judgment or Order. The judgment or order must be definite and certain in its terms.⁶⁹ Alternative judgments or orders are not allowed either in civil or criminal contempts.⁷⁰

c. Partial Invalidity. The fact that the judgment may be void in part does not render the whole judgment a nullity.⁷¹

Final judgment.—Where the court imposes a fine and imprisonment for five days and final order may be renewed or annulled at the same or a subsequent term upon motion.⁷³

R. Commitment—1. NECESSITY OF ORDER. To authorize imprisonment a warrant or order stating the cause of commitment and its term must be issued.⁷⁴

2. ENTITLEMENT OF ORDER. While the better practice is to have the mittimus entitled and issued in the regular contempt proceeding it is not fatal that it was issued under the title of the cause in which the contempt is charged.⁷⁵

3. RENDITION AND ENTRY OF ORDER. The order need not be in writing and sealed,⁷⁶ but should be entered upon the court's minutes.⁷⁷

4. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF ORDER—a. In General. The order or warrant of commitment must be definite and certain,⁷⁸ must show an adjudication that a

Second motion to set aside.—Under the code giving the surrogate court power to reconsider its decisions, but limiting the exercise and power to the same manner to which it is exercised by a court of record, a surrogate court having issued an order to commit defendant for contempt and denied a motion to set aside the commitment, defendant cannot, after failing to appeal from the order, demand that the court consider a second motion to set aside the commitment, and cannot bring the cause before the supreme court by appeal from an order denying such second motion. Matter of Hayward, 44 N. contempt has been committed,⁷⁹ and must set forth such facts as show jurisdiction.⁸⁰ All mandatory statutory requirements respecting the form and contents of the warrant or order must be substantially observed.⁸¹ If the order or warrant is issued to commit for failure to pay a fine imposed for contempt, the amount of the fine should be specified.⁸² Unnecessary words and phrases inserted will not render the commitment void but may be treated as surplusage.⁸³

b. Alternative Order. An alternative order of commitment is void.⁸⁴

c. Setting Forth Facts Constituting Contempt. The warrant of commitment should state the facts upon which the order is founded.⁸⁵ Authority is not wanting, however, in support of the view that the particular facts which constitute the alleged contempt need not be set forth.⁸⁶ Under a code provision authorizing imprisonment, where the contempt charged consists in the failure to perform an act or duty which is within the power of the offender to perform the warrant must specify the act or duty required to be performed,⁸⁷ and must further set forth that it is in the power of the offender to comply with the provisions of the order.⁸⁸

d. Limiting Time of Imprisonment. The order or warrant of commitment must limit the term of imprisonment.⁸⁹ It has been held, however, that if the contempt consists of an omission to do that which it is in the power of the offender to do, it is not required that the commitment state the duration of the imprisonment.⁹⁰ So a witness who refuses to answer a proper question may be committed "until he may answer."⁹¹

b. Non-Payment of Fine or Costs. Unless expressly forbidden by statute, where a fine is imposed for a criminal contempt, or a fine or penalty as an indemnity to the party injured for neglect or refusal to obey a court order or decree made for the benefit of such party in a civil action, or where the payment of costs and expenses is adjudged, imprisonment may be inflicted until the judgment for contempt is satisfied.⁹⁷

3. INDEMNITY TO INJURED PARTY — a. In General. Fines for contempt by way of indemnity to the injured party are sometimes imposed.⁹⁸ The power of the court to award indemnity to the injured party rests, however, upon statute.⁹⁹ Thus a party in contempt cannot be required to pay damages sustained by the injured party, under a statute restricting the punishment to a specified fine or imprisonment for a limited time.¹

b. Extent of Indemnity — (1) IN GENERAL. In determining the measure of indemnity the extent of injury and proper redress to those whose rights have been impaired or delayed will be considered.² The amount of indemnity cannot, tion the court may permit a hearing on a motion for its dissolution.¹¹ Furthermore the legal rights of a party in contempt will be protected.¹² So a party in contempt cannot be denied the right of appeal. The right of appeal is a matter of right and not of favor or grace of the court.¹³

C. Extent—1. IN GENERAL. Unless limited by statute, the extent of punishment is discretionary with the court,¹⁴ but it must not be excessive.¹⁵ In determining the amount of punishment to be imposed the court will take into consideration all surrounding facts and circumstances.¹⁶ Where a party is in contempt through a misapprehension of his duties, or where it results from a mistake and a reasonable excuse is presented to the court, ordinarily the party will be discharged upon the payment of the costs and expenses of the proceeding.¹⁷

Refusal of witness to answer.—Where a witness refused to answer a number of questions directed to the same point, the court cannot find him guilty of a separate contempt for every question which he refused to answer. The act constitutes but one contempt and but one sentence can be imposed. Maxwell v. Rives, 11 Nev. 213.

Refusal to be sworn.—The punishment of a witness for contempt in refusing to be sworn by imprisonment for one day is no bar to second punishment for the refusal to be again sworn at the expiration of the first imprisonment. Each refusal to be sworn is a separate contempt. Ex p. Stice, 70 Cal. 51, 11 Pac. 459.

after the institution of the proceedings will usually be regarded as a sufficient purging of the contempt, especially where no material injury or loss has been suffered by the party for whose benefit the action was taken.²² Where costs are incurred by reason of the neglect or refusal, ordinarily the guilty party will be required to pay them.²³

2. AFTER ADJUDICATION. One adjudged guilty of contempt will generally be allowed to purge the contempt by performing the act required or undoing or reversing the acts constituting the contempt, or where the act has caused injury to a party to the suit by making reparation to the injured party.²⁴

E. Discharge — 1. POWER TO DISCHARGE. A court which commits one for contempt may release him during the same term and while the action is pending for good cause.²⁵ But one court has no power to discharge a person committed by another court for contempt.²⁶

2. GROUNDS FOR DISCHARGE — a. In General. One committed for contempt until he appears before the grand jury may be discharged after the discharge of the grand jury.²⁷ So a witness committed until he shall answer in the particular proceeding may be discharged when the proceeding is discontinued.²⁸ And a party committed for not performing a decree will be discharged on proof of his insanity.²⁹ But mere irregularity in the proceedings leading to the commitment is no ground for discharge where it appears that the court had jurisdiction.³⁰ So the fact that imprisonment seriously interferes with the collection of county revenue is not sufficient reason to discharge county officers imprisoned for contempt.³¹ And one imprisoned for advising parties to disobey a judgment is not entitled to a discharge because of the fact that the parties so advised had purged themselves of their contempt.³²

b. Inability to Comply With Requirement. Where one is imprisoned for contempt the court may at any time in its discretion, either on its motion or upon proper application, inquire into the question of the ability of the offender to obey the order,³³ and if satisfied of the inability of the offender to comply he may be discharged.³⁴ Thus the insolvency of one committed for contempt is ground for his discharge,³⁵ at least where he complies with the conditions of the insolvency or Poor Debtors' Act.³⁶ dictated in the punishment undergone the prisoner may be discharged, although he has not performed the act required of him.³⁸

4. APPLICATION — a. Requisites and Sufficiency. The application for discharge should state sufficient grounds to justify the granting of such relief.³⁹

b. Notice. Where defendant was committed for contempt in not obeying an order to appear before an examiner and be examined, and afterward did appear and was examined, notice of the motion to discharge must be served upon plaintiff before discharge can be had.⁴⁰

c. Time of Application. The application for discharge should be seasonably made.⁴¹

5. IMPOSITION OF CONDITIONS. The court may impose reasonable conditions upon the grant of a discharge,⁴² such as the payment of the costs and expenses of the proceeding leading to the commitment, the giving of security to pay the fine, etc.⁴³ But where one is unlawfully imprisoned for an alleged contempt he cannot be forced to stipulate that he will not sue for false imprisonment, as a condition of the discharge.⁴⁴

F. Pardon. Since a contempt of court is an offense against the state, and not against the judge personally, an order of the judge inflicting punishment for contempt is within the range of the pardoning prerogatives vested in the executive.⁴⁵

See also In re Terry, 36 Fed. 419, holding that an application for discharge for assaulting a court officer and addressing disrespectful language to the court, which merely alleges no intentional disrespect to court, without expressing regret for the acts, and which also misstates facts relating to the contempt is insufficient.

B. Mode of Review — 1. IN GENERAL. The method to be adopted to secure a review of the proceedings or relief from alleged erroneous action of the trial court depends upon the nature of the error claimed, the condition of the record of the case, the progress made in the hearing at the time the relief is sought, and the statutes of the particular state.⁵¹

2. CERTIORARI. In a proper case certiorari may be invoked to correct errors of the trial court in matters of contempt.⁵² The writ will not issue if the error complained of is one that can be corrected by appeal.⁵³

3. HABEAS CORPUS. In matters of contempt the jurisdiction may be inquired into on habeas corpus.⁵⁴ So habeas corpus is a proper remedy in cases for con-

L. ed. 853, holding that an order fining a person for the violation of an injunction, which directs that the fine be paid to the adverse party, being an interlocutory order in a civil suit, is reviewable.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contempt," § 224.

As to appeal from interlocutory orders generally see APPEAL AND ERROR, III, D [2 Cyc. 586].

51. In Colorado the statute declaring that judgments and orders of a court made in cases of contempt shall be final and conclusive has reference only to the extent of review and not to the mode, as by writ of error or otherwise. Cooper v. People, 13 Colo. 337, 373, 22 Pac. 790, 6 L. R. A. 430.

Second application for attachment.—Where an application for attachment to compel a party to pay alimony has been dismissed, the pending of an appeal is no bar to a second and similar application for attachment to compel payment of alimony accruing after the dismissal of the first application. State v. McClinton, 17 Wash. 45, 48 Pac. 740.

Trial court cannot grant a stay of proceedings where an appeal has been taken; the application should be made to the court in which the appeal is pending. Van Orden v. Van Orden, 27 N. Y. App. Div. 136, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 184.

63. Ex p. Clancy, 90 Cal. 553, 27 Pac. 411; Fischer v. Hayes, 7 Fed. 96, 19 Blatchf. 184.

Breach of bond.—Where an appeal-bond was conditioned upon the surrender to the sheriff within ten days after affirmance, the surrender to the sheriff within ten days after a rehearing was refused was not within the conditions of the bond. Klein v. Boyd, 169 Ill. 325, 48 N. E. 475 [affirming 67 Ill. App. 165].

In Iowa the evidence upon which the court acted in the proceeding for contempt is required to be preserved in the record, or if the court acted upon its own knowledge a statement of the facts must be filed. Dorgan v. Granges, 76 Iowa 156, 40 N. W. 697; State v. Dougherty, 32 Iowa 261; State v. Utley, 13 Iowa 593; Skiff v. State, 2 Iowa 550. But under the statute requiring the evidence in the proceeding to be in writing and filed the writ of injunction disobeyed is not included. Jordan v. Wapello County Cir. Ct., 69 Iowa 177, 28 N. W. 548. And a failure to preserve a statement of the facts on which the order was granted will not be fatal, where the facts of the contempt were at the time taken down by a shorthand reporter and afterward filed. Small v. Wakefield, 84 Iowa 533, 51 N. W. 35; Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66 Iowa 629, 24 N. W. 245.

Under the Indiana statute requiring a verified charge setting forth the facts constituting the contempt, the verified charge is a part of the record without being made so by bill of exceptions. Stewart v. State, 140 Ind. 7, 39 N. E. 508.

Under a code provision providing that a party may be punished as for a civil contempt where the act committed impaired, impeded, or prejudiced the rights or remedies of the complaining party the record on appeal must show that there had been an adjudication, that he had committed the acts complained of, or that plaintiff's rights had been impaired by his acts. *Dailey v. against a person for disobeying an order, the propriety of such order cannot be questioned.⁶⁷

2. DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT. In the absence of statutory regulation, the matter of dealing with contempts, and when and how they shall be punished, are within the sound discretion of the trial court, and unless such discretion is grossly abused the decision must stand.⁶⁸

3. HARMLESS ERROR. Mere irregularities in the proceedings, or errors of judgment on the part of the trial court, which do not affect the substantial rights of defendant ordinarily will not be considered on review.⁶⁹

Before defendant will be discharged it

4. PRESUMPTIONS. Every fact found by a court in a proceeding for contempt is to be taken as true, and every intendment is to be made in favor of its record, if it appears within the jurisdiction of the court.⁷⁰ Thus where the objection that no competent order was made for the issuing of the attachment was not raised in the trial court, the court reviewing the proceedings will presume that such an order had been made.⁷¹ Unless the fact affirmatively appears from the record, it will be presumed that the court did not adjudge defendant guilty without an examination of the facts and an opportunity to be heard.⁷²

5. QUESTIONS OF FACT. The review is generally limited to questions of law. Questions of fact will not be considered.⁷³ The court, however, may determine whether the alleged contemptuous conduct constitutes a contempt in law.⁷⁴

G. Determination and Disposition of Cause. The reviewing court has power to affirm⁷⁵ in whole or in part, reverse⁷⁶ in whole or in part, or modify⁷⁷ must appear that the proceedings were in whole or in part void. Ex p. Keeler, 45 S. C. 537, 23 S. E. 865, 55 Am. St. Rep. 785, 31 L. R. A. 678.

70. Gunn v. Calhoun, 51 Ga. 501; Com. v. Newton, 1 Grant (Pa.) 453. So an order will not be reversed because it does not affirmatively appear from the appeal papers that proof of the misconduct was made by affidavit, and due notice given. Sudlow v. Knox, 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 326, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 411.

Existence of jurisdictional facts.—It will be presumed in support of the judgment that the necessary jurisdictional facts existed. In re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 9 S. Ct. 703, 33 L. ed. 154.

71. Park v. Park, 80 N. Y. 156. See also Beck v. State, 72 Ind. 250.

Scope of order.—It will be assumed that the order of the trial court fully expresses the intention of the court as to the scope of the order disobeyed. People v. Bergen, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 267.

72. Papke v. Papke, 30 Minn. 260, 15 N. W. 117. And it is presumed that the trial court considered all matters offered in defense or extenuation, and its judgment is conclusive. Seventy-six Land, etc., Co. v. Fresno County Super. Ct., 93 Cal. 139, 28 Pac. 813.

Conformity to rules of practice.—It will be presumed by the appeal court that the chancellor conformed to the rule of practice as it existed in his own court. Lewis v. Miller, 13 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 110.

Where the judgment is in accordance with the law and facts, the supreme court will affirm it, and will not consider the general policy of punishing for the contempt. In re Chessemann, 49 N. J. L. 115, 6 Atl. 513, 60 Am. Rep. 596.

76. Middlebrook v. State, 43 Conn. 257, 21 Am. Rep. 650; Patton v. Harris, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 607.

Effect of reversal.—Where the order for the disobedience of which defendant was adjudged in contempt has been reversed by the appellate court the order adjudging the contempt also falls. Smith v. McQuade, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 63, 36 N. Y. St. 557.

77. Turner v. Com., 2 Metc. (Ky.) 619; Bickley v. Com., 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 572; Fechter v. Hays, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 217; State v. Houston, 40 La. Ann. 434, 4 So. 131.

Costs.—The appellate court will not modify the order so as to include the costs of the appeal where they were not included in the order to show cause. Tucker v. Gilman, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 392, 37 N. Y. St. 958, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 397.

Reduction of fine.—The court has power to make a reduction of the fine imposed by the lower court. Buffalo Loan, etc., Co. v. Medina Gas, etc., Light Co., 68 N. Y. App. Div. 414, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 486. Thus where the fine assessed was in excess of the amount limited by the statute, the appellate court will modify the order reducing the fine within the

the judgment of the trial court. In a proper case the cause may be dismissed⁷⁸ or remanded to the trial court with directions as to further proceedings, or to enter such judgment as may seem proper.⁷⁹ When the reviewing court has given final judgment in a case all questions therein become res adjudicata.⁸⁰

X. COSTS.

In civil contempts if the rule is made absolute the costs should be taxed against defendant, but if discharged, against complainant.⁸¹ In a proceeding for a criminal contempt it has been held that costs cannot be imposed.⁸²

CONTENEMENT or CONTENTMENT. A man's countenance or credit, which he has together with, and by reason of, his freehold; or, that which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeably to their several qualities of life.¹

CONTENTION. A violent effort to obtain something, or to resist physical force, whether an assault or bodily opposition; physical contest; struggle; strife.²

CONTENTIOUS. Contested; adversary; litigated between adverse or contending parties; a judicial proceeding not merely ex parte in its character, but comprising attack and defense as between opposing parties, is so called.³

limits of the statute. Luedeke v. Coursen, 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 559, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 314, 52 N. Y. St. 516.

Where the order has been modified, such as finding that the amount which defendant was ordered to pay was too large, the appellate court in reviewing the order of commitment may discharge the party from the contempt without prejudice to institute proceedings if the amount as found by the appellate court is not paid. Gilman v. Byrnes, 10 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 46.

78. Where the party was adjudged guilty of contempt and ordered to be confined for a term which has long since elapsed, the supreme court dismissed the writ of error on the ground that a reversal would be inoperative to release plaintiff in error from the punishment he has suffered, while an affirmance could not restore vitality to an order limited to particular debts long since past. Loven v. People, 46 Ill. App. 306.

79. Russell v. Mohr-Weil Lumber Co., 102 Ga. 563, 29 S. E. 271; Tolleson v. People's Sav. Bank, 85 Ga. 171, 11 S. E. 599. But see Livingston v. Swift, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1, holding that on reversing the order of commitment the supreme court will not make such order as the court below ought to have made, but will leave the parties to such future proceedings to vindicate their rights as they shall be advised.

Reference.—The supreme court may direct the lower court to have a reference made of the facts and that thereafter the lower court should take such further action in regard to the discharge of the contemner as in its discretion might seem just and lawful. Ryan v. Kingsbery, 89 Ga. 228, 15 S. E. 302. See also Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 377.

80. Ryan v. Kingsbery, 89 Ga. 228, 15 S. E. 302.

Modification after affirmance.—Where the supreme court has affirmed a judgment it has no power afterward to modify or remit the fine. In re Griffin, 98 N. C. 225, 3 S. E. 515.

82. People v. Gilmore, 88 N. Y. 626 [reversing 26 Hun 1]; Doyle v. Doyle, 4 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 265. But see State v. Rinehart, 92 Tenn. 270, 21 S. W. 524, holding that defendant is liable for the costs of attachments against witnesses, where witnesses were afterward found innocent of any contempt.

As to imprisonment for non-payment of fine and costs see supra, VIII, B, 2, b.

Taxation against county.—Where the proceeding is of a criminal nature and the party discharged, the costs should be taxed against the county. State v. Milligan, 4 Wash. 29, 29 Pac. 763.

7. Barney v. Globe Bank, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 107, 115, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,031.

Construing the terms as used in the judiciary act of 1789 "the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action," it was said in Corbin v. Black Hawk County, 105 U. S. 659, 26 L. ed. 1136 [quoted in Republic Iron Min. Co. v. Jones, 37 Fed. 721, 722, 2

L. R. A. 746]: "The contents of a contract, as a chose in action, in the sense of section 629, are the rights created by it in favor of a party in whose behalf stipulations are made in it which he has a right to enforce in a suit founded on the contract; and a suit to enforce such stipulations is a suit to recover such contents." And see Simons v. Ypsilanti Paper Co., 33 Fed. 193, 194. See also Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 582, 583, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,677.

8. Black L. Dict.

What the terms import.—In Clark v. Barnwell, 12 How. (U. S.) 272, 283, 13 L. ed. 985, the bill of lading contained the usual clause, that the goods were shipped in good order; but there was added, at the conclusion, "contents unknown." The court said: "It is obvious, therefore, that the acknowledgment of the master as to the condition of the goods when received on board, extended only to the external condition of the cases, excluding any implication as to the quantity or quality of the article, the condition of it at the time received on board, or whether properly packed or not in the boxes."

"'Contents and gauge unknown,' used in this bill of lading, [they] cannot be considered as implying more than ignorance of the quantity or quality, not of the fact of there being molasses in the casks." Nelson v. Stephenson, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 538, 552.

9. Black L. Dict.

10. The term is considered as a word of art when used in constitutions and statutes and has a distinct and defined meaning. Pratt v. Breckinridge, 65 S. W. 136, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1356.

11. Century Dict.

12. Pratt v. Breckinridge, 65 S. W. 136, 142, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1356, where it is said: "It implies a plaintiff and a defendant, and a thing in controversy."

13. Dalton v. State, 43 Ohio St. 652, 683, 3 N. E. 685.

verb, to make a subject of dispute, contention, or litigation;¹⁴ to call in question; to controvert; to oppose; to dispute;¹⁵ to defend, as a suit or other judicial proceeding;¹⁶ to dispute or resist, as a claim, by course of law;¹⁷ to litigate;¹⁸ to strive to win or hold; to challenge.¹⁹ (Context: Of Claim, see ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS; BANKRUPTCY; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; INSOLVENCY. When applied to a use, remainder, devise, bequest, or other legal right or interest, implies that no present interest exists, and that whether such interest or right ever will exist depends upon a future uncertain event. Jemison v. Blowers, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 686, 692.

46. Webster Dict. [quoted in Verdier v. Roach, 96 Cal. 457, 474, 31 Pac. 554].

The legal definition of the word concurs with its ordinary acceptation in showing that the term "contingent" implies a possibility. Jemison v. Blowers, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 686, 692.

chance, without design or expectation.⁴⁷ In law, dependent for effect on something that may or may not occur.⁴⁸ (Contingent: Damages, see DAMAGES. Estate, see CONTRACTS; DEEDS; ESTATES; WILLS. Fees, see ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE. Interest, see CONTRACTS; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION. Remainder, see DEEDS; ESTATES; WILLS.)

CONTINGENT CLAIM. A claim which may never accrue.⁴⁹

CONTINGENT DEBT. Not a demand whose existence depended on a contingency, but an existing demand, the cause of action upon which depends on a contingency.⁵⁰

CONTINGENT DEMAND. The term is applicable where a present claim exists, or where it is certain to arise in future; and it is only appropriate when there is no claim in presenti, and when it is uncertain whether any in fact will ever arise.⁵¹

CONTINGENT EVENTS. All anticipated future events which are not certain to occur.⁵²

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.⁵³ A round sum appropriated by congress to meet certain disbursements of the public service.⁵⁴ Used in connection with municipal, public improvements, expenses which the commissioners could not ascertain—expenses which were unknown, and were uncertain, and which might or might not be incurred thereafter.⁵⁵

CONTINGENT INTEREST IN PERSONAL PROPERTY. A future interest not transmissible to the representatives of the party entitled thereto, in case he dies before it vests in possession.⁵⁶

CONTINGENT RIGHTS. Rights which are only to come into existence on an

Fla. 138, 197, 13 So. 705, where it is said: "The words 'continued in office' imply not the beginning of a new and different holding, but the prolongation of one already existing."

A provision in the bond of a treasurer of a corporation, whose office is annual, securing his fidelity, during his "continuance in office," means no longer time than the year for which he was chosen, and such further time as is reasonably sufficient for the election and qualification of his successor; it cannot be extended to embrace an indefinite period by reëlection or otherwise. Mutual Loan, etc., Assoc. v. Price, 16 Fla. 204, 26 Am. Rep. 703.

I. DEFINITION.

A continuance is "the adjournment of a cause from one day to another of the same or a subsequent term."¹

II. RIGHT TO CONTINUANCES IN GENERAL.

Continuances of causes are not favored by the courts, and when granted, the grounds alleged must be such that the court may clearly see that a postponement of the cause will result in a furtherance of justice.² It is difficult to lay down any general rule. The right to obtain a continuance is frequently very much abused, and it is proper that courts should be vigilant in preventing such abuse;³ while on the other hand it is important that the fair exercise of the right should not be denied, for it is of the first importance to the correct administration of jus-

1. 1 Bouvier L. Dict. See also 3 Bl. Comm. 316. In Stephen Pl. § 59, in treating of proceedings in an action, the learned author says: "During this oral altercation a contemporaneous official minute in writing was drawn up by one of the officers of the court, on a parchment roll, containing a transcript of all the different allegations of fact to the issue inclusive. And, in addition to this, it comprised a short notice of the nature of the action, the time of the appearance of the parties in court, and the acts of the court itself during the progress of the pleading. These chiefly consisted of what were called the 'continuances' of the proceedings—the nature of which was as follows: There were certain purposes for which the law allowed the proceedings to be adjourned, or continued over from one term to another, or from one day to another in the same term; and when this happened, an entry of such adjournment to a given day and of its cause was made on the parchment roll; and by that entry the parties were also appointed to reappear at the given day in court. Such adjournment was called a continuance. Thus the award of the mode of trial on an issue in fact, and also the adjournment of the parties to a certain day to hear the decision of the court on an issue in law, were each of them continuances, and were entered as such on the roll." And see CONTINUANCES IN CRIMINAL CASES, post p. 163.

Other definitions are: "The adjournment or postponement of an action pending in a court to a subsequent day of the same or another term." Black L. Dict.

"Also the entry of a continuance made upon the record of the court, for the purpose of formally evidencing the postponement, or of connecting the parts of the record so as to make one continuous whole." Black L. Dict.

"Continuance, in the common law, is of the same signification with prorogatio in the civil; as continuance till the next assize. (Terms de la Ley, Am. ed. p. 114.)" Palmer v. Hutchins, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 42.

2. Childs v. Heaton, 11 Iowa 271; James v. Arbuckle, 8 Iowa 272; State v. Tilghman, 6 Iowa 496; Brady v. Malone, 4 Iowa 146;

Rice v. Hodge, 26 Kan. 164; Symes v. Irvine, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 383, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,714. See also Peck v. Moody, 33 Tex. 84. It is clearly the intention of the statutes on this subject, while protecting the courts from imposition and unnecessary delays, to secure a reasonable opportunity to litigants to try their causes on the merits, to the end that justice may be done; and while no definite rule can be laid down embracing all the different circumstances under which continuances should be granted, this spirit and intention should always be borne in mind; for this much at least is certain: that where the circumstances are such as would authorize the court to relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect, a continuance should be granted. Light v. Richardson, (Cal. 1893) 31 Pac. 1123.

Where it appears that no judgment was entered of record in the court below, but that a verdict was returned by the jury, a continuance will be allowed to enable the appellant to apply to the court below to have the judgment entered as of the term at which the verdict was returned and the appeal granted. Kelsey v. Berry, 40 Ill. 69.

3. Penne v. Tourne, 2 La. 462.

Absence of court stenographer.—A continuance should not be granted merely because the court stenographer is "unwell," and that there is no one else capable of taking his place, especially where the application is unverified. Callahan v. Billat, 68 Mo. App. 435.

Convenience or delicacy.—Litigants are required to be vigilant in the prosecution or defense of their causes, and will not be permitted to delay trials to subserve their own convenience or for trifling reasons. Hannah v. Chadwick, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 517. So a cause will not be continued from mere motives of delicacy. Simons v. Sheftall, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 90.

Intoxication of party.—It is not commendable practice for a court to stop the trial of a cause and continue the same on the ground that the plaintiff is intoxicated. Charles v. People's Ins. Co., 3 Colo. 419.

time.⁴ It has been the policy of the courts to always deny an application for a continuance when a delay of the cause is unnecessary and could effect no beneficial result.⁵ Thus a continuance will not be granted where there is no defense to the action,⁶ where the applicant has made default,⁷ or where a cause clearly decisive of the case at bar has already been disposed of.⁸ So a continuance will not be granted for the purpose of obtaining evidence which would not affect the result,⁹ to obtain a judgment which could not be used in the suit in which the continuance is sought,¹⁰ or to bring in new parties who have no interest in the suit.¹¹

4. Penne v. Tourne, 2 La. 462.

Failure to seal bill of exceptions.—When the judge who presided at the trial of the cause dies without having sealed and sent up the bill of exceptions, the cause may be continued, to enable the party to have it sealed by another member of the court below. McCandless v. McWha, 20 Pa. St. 183.

Uncontrollable circumstances.—Where parties have been diligent in their efforts to be ready for trial, but have been prevented by circumstances beyond their control, the court should grant them a continuance. Radford v. Fowlkes, 85 Va. 820, 8 S. E. 817.

Limitation of rule.—The rule that an application for continuance will not be regarded when made by a defendant who has interposed no defense except a general denial is limited to cases in which the general denial constitutes no defense. Where under a general denial the defendant would be allowed to introduce rebutting evidence, it is sufficient to authorize the consideration of an application for continuance. Texas Transp. Co. v. Hyatt, 54 Tex. 213.

Result of proceedings elsewhere.—Where the matter stated in the affidavit shows no present defense to the action, it was held improper to continue the cause to await the result of proceedings elsewhere, which might or might not so result as to entitle the defendant to a credit upon his indebtedness, established in the suit in which the continuance was asked. Field v. Sanderson, 34 Mo. 542, 86 Am. Dec. 124.

7. Duncan v. Hobart, 8 Iowa 337; James v. Arbuckle, 8 Iowa 272; Atkins v. McCready, 8 Iowa 214.

All pleadings withdrawn.—Where a party has withdrawn all his pleadings, there is nothing to support an application for a continuance. Siddall v. Goggan, 68 Tex. 708, 5 S. W. 668.

Answer admitting claim.—Where the defendant by his answer admits the justice of the plaintiff's claim, a continuance should be refused. Duncan v. Hobart, 8 Iowa 337.

8. Markson v. Ide, 29 Kan. 700.

9. Stringham v. Parket, 159 Ill. 304, 42 N. E. 794; Nebraska Land, etc., Stock Co. v. Burris, 10 S. D. 430, 73 N. W. 919. Thus a continuance will not be granted to obtain evidence to support an answer which, if proved to be true, is no defense to the action (Claiborne v. Yoeman, 15 Tex. 44); where the testimony of an absent witness in view of the evidence produced on the trial was not probably true (Belknap v. Groover, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 249); where the evidence when obtained cannot benefit the party seeking it (Stringham v. Parker, 159 Ill. 304, 42 N. E. 794; Life Ins. Clearing Co. v. Altschuler, 55 Nebr. 341, 75 N. W. 862; Williams v. Talbot, 27 Tex. 159; Titus v. Crittenden, 8 Tex. 139); where a continuance was asked on account of the absence of a witness whose testimony is not material (Ware v. Kelley, 22 Ark. 441; Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 641; Marble v. Bonhotel, 35 Ill. 240); where testimony expected of an absent witness was hearsay (Belknap v. Groover, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 249); where the evidence desired is inadmissible under the pleadings (Nebraska Land, etc., Stock Co. v. Burris, 10 S. D. 430, 73 N. W. 919); or where the application presented such a state of circumstances as to reasonably preclude all hope of procuring testimony of the witnesses if the continuance was allowed (Buchanan v. McClain, 110 Ga. 477, 35 S. E. 665; Slade v. McClure, 76 Ill. 319; Wilkins v. Beadleston, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 489, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 683).

III. KINDS OF CONTINUANCES.

A. For Cause Shown. The most usual kind of continuance with which the courts are required to deal is where the relief is asked on some specified ground and cause is shown why the applicant is entitled to a postponement of the cause.¹²

B. On Court's Own Motion. There is some diversity of holding in respect to the power of the trial court to grant a continuance on its own motion. In one jurisdiction, without mentioning any statutory provision, it was held within the discretion of the court to grant a continuance of its own motion where the continuances of the party had been exhausted.¹³ In another jurisdiction, under a statute giving the court discretionary power to grant continuances "whenever the cause alleged by the party applying for it appears sufficient to justify the same," it was held that the court could not without an application from one of the parties arbitrarily force a continuance upon them.¹⁴ So in another jurisdiction it was held that where none of the parties appeared on the day set for hearing, the court might of its own motion continue the case indefinitely.¹⁵

C. By Consent, Agreement, or Stipulation — 1. IN GENERAL. Consent of the parties to an action, or their attorneys, has been usually held to authorize a continuance.¹⁶ A case may be postponed by the agreement of the parties acting for themselves or through their attorneys and with the consent of the court,¹⁷ but an agreement by the parties that a cause shall be continued does not operate as a postponement without the sanction of the court, and does not of itself bind the court.¹⁸ A party is therefore not justified in assuming that a cause will be postponed simply because he has agreed with his adversary that it shall be. Nor is he authorized to assume that opposing counsel acted in bad faith because the court declined to sanction an agreement to a postponement.¹⁹

2. VERBAL AGREEMENTS OR STIPULATIONS. Verbal agreements or stipulations between parties or their attorneys for the continuation of a pending cause are not favored by the courts and are not bound to be regarded.²⁰ In order that the court

Case under rule for trial.—The continuance of a cause, by consent or by order of the court, while it is under a rule for trial or non prosequitur does not discharge the rule; and such a rule continues until it is expressly discharged. King of Spain v. Oliver, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,812, Pet. C. C. 217.

Rule mandatory.—Under a rule of court which provides that "no cause after being placed on the trial list, shall be continued more than once by consent of counsel or parties," the court is bound to grant at least one continuance, if both parties consent. Schrimpton v. Bertolet, 155 Pa. St. 638, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 429, 26 Atl. 776.

17. Meagher v. Gagliardo, 35 Cal. 602.

Nominal party.—An agreement made by a person to allow a continuance of a cause, the person being neither a party nor attorney of a party, but having an interest in the action, is not binding on a nominal party who has also a substantial interest. Anderson v.

Citizens' Nat. Bank, 68 Tex. 645, 5 S. W. 503.

Notice of trial.—If a cause has been continued from term to term by consent, it is the duty of the parties to be ready for trial at any subsequent time; and notice that it is intended to try the cause is not required from either party. King of Spain v. Oliver, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,812, Pet. C. C. 217.

South Carolina.—Hort v. Jones, 2 Bay 440. Texas.—Price v. Lauve, 49 Tex. 74.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 12.

Issue as to actual agreement.—Plaintiff's motion for a continuance founded upon an alleged oral agreement of counsel made out of court, but denied by defendant's counsel, is properly refused, the court not being bound by such agreements, especially where counsel differ as to what the agreement actually was. Clark v. Dekker, 43 Kan. 692, 23 Pac. 956.

Resolutions of bar association.—Resolushall recognize such an agreement as ground for continuing the case the same must be in writing²¹ and of such a definite nature that the court may construe its terms.²²

D. By Operation of Law—1. IN GENERAL. All causes not tried or otherwise disposed of during a term stand continued as of course;²³ the court does not lose jurisdiction thereof by reason of delay in bringing them to trial,²⁴ and it is not necessary to have a special order of continuance entered in the cause.²⁵

2. AFTER REVERSAL BY APPELLATE COURT. After a cause has been remanded by an appellate court, the subsequent continuances are usually regulated by statute or rule of court.²⁶ Sufficient time will usually be allowed to elapse between the reversal and the beginning of the new trial for a party to make reasonable preparation;²⁷ but a further continuance will not be granted on the ground that

tions of a bar meeting touching the disposition of cases invoked in an application for a continuance, and not as a written agreement filed in the case, will not be enforced. Price v. Lauve, 49 Tex. 74.

The statutes of some jurisdictions expressly require an agreement for a continuance to be in writing. Collier v. Falk, 66 Ala. 222; Sapp v. Aiken, 68 Iowa 699, 28 N. W. 24.

21. Strong v. District of Columbia, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 499; Griswold v. Lawrence, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 507.

Verbal agreement misleading.—In an action to try title, when there is no written agreement by counsel in regard to notice of filing deeds, if plaintiff's counsel is misled by a verbal agreement, or what he understood to be such, the court may postpone the trial to allow further time for giving the notice; but this will not give defendant a right to demand a continuance when the case is called a second time. Capt v. Stubbs, 68 Tex. 222, 4 S. W. 467.

22. Hort v. Jones, 2 Bay (S. C.) 440.

Defective signature.—A stipulation signed by one of several plaintiffs does not necessitate a continuance. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Elliott, 2 Indian Terr. 407, 51 S. W. 1067.

23. Alabama.—Greer v. McGehee, 3 Port. 398.

Missouri.—Watson v. Walsh, 10 Mo. 454.

Nebraska.—Strickler v. Foegel, 40 Nebr. 773, 59 N. W. 384.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 3. See also infra, VII, A.

No court held.—Where executors give notice to the circuit court on a certain day in the term (being the fourth day), for an order to sell lands for debts, and file their petition before the first day of the term, but no court was held at that term, the proceeding is continued by operation of law. Whitman v. Fisher, 74 Ill. 147.

Order of reference.—An order of reference virtually continues a cause in court from term to term so long as it remains in force. Mendenhall v. Smith, Minor (Ala.) 380.

24. Strickler v. Foegel, 40 Nebr. 773, 59 N. W. 384.

25. Greer v. McGehee, 3 Port. (Ala.) 398; Udike v. Armstrong, 4 Ill. 564; Trew v. Gaskill, 10 Ind. 265; Watson v. Walsh, 10 Mo. 454. And see infra, VII, A.

Not assignable as error.—It is no ground of error that a judge who was incompetent to sit in a cause granted a continuance thereof, where it would have been continued by operation of law had no action been taken. Stone v. Robinson, 9 Ark. 469.

26. Walker v. Floyd, 30 Ga. 237; McNeeley v. Hunton, 30 Mo. 332.

The Georgia act of Jan. 22, 1852, "to regulate the practice of the Supreme Court and of the Superior Courts of this State," etc., provides, "That when any cause shall be sent back to the Superior Court by the Supreme Court, the same shall be in order for trial at the first Term of the Superior Court next after the decision of the said Supreme Court. And where either party may have exhausted their continuances on the appeal, the said Superior Court shall have full power and authority to grant one continuance to said party as the ends of justice may require." Walker v. Floyd, 30 Ga. 237, 239; Young v. Harrison, 21 Ga. 584.

Where, in accordance with the usage of the circuit court, a case reversed and remanded from the supreme court was continued until the next term after the judgment of revision was filed, it was held that there was no error. McNeeley v. Hunton, 30 Mo. 332.

27. Youngblood v. Youngblood, 76 Ga. 840.

Not matter of right.—A party will not be entitled to a continuance as a matter of right because a return of a cause with a mandate from the supreme court to the circuit court had not been filed before the term. The party is only entitled to sufficient time to prepare for trial. Dodge v. Deal, 28 Ill. 303.

Change of venue.—Where the mandate of the court of appeals has been on file in the lower court ten days before the trial begins, a continuance should not be granted to allow defendant to apply for a change of venue. Newcomb-Buchanan Co. v. Baskett, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 828.

Report of decision.—The fact that a full report of the decision of the supreme court in a case remanded for a new trial has not been received is not a sufficient ground of continuance in the court below. Walker v. Floyd, 30 Ga. 237.

the parties were ignorant of the remanding and hence unprepared to go to trial.²⁸

IV. GROUNDS FOR CONTINUANCE.

A. In General. The grounds upon which a continuance of a cause will be granted are usually regulated by statute in the several states,²⁹ or by rules of court specially relating to continuance, so far as they are not in conflict with some positive statutory requirement.³⁰

B. Defect of Parties. Where all the parties in interest are not before the court the case may be continued to bring them in,³¹ unless it shall appear that Petition of intervention.—In Ikerd v. Postlewhaite, 36 La. Ann. 236, it was held error not to grant a delay of fifteen minutes before dismissing a suit by consent of the parties, to enable one asserting an interest in the subject-matter to file a petition of intervention, subject to the right of either original party to cause the dismissal of the intervention by proper exception.

Representatives of deceased partner.—A continuance will be granted to allow the representatives of a deceased partner in the firm which sues, to be made parties, even when his death is suggested by defendant's counsel such continuance can serve no useful purpose or is asked merely for the purpose of delay.³²

C. Insufficient Service of Process. In the absence of any special statutory authorization, it has been held that where service of process is defective, the court may properly allow a plaintiff further time to perfect such service;³³ but a defendant who sets up no valid defense, and makes no showing that he is unprepared for trial is not entitled to a continuance merely because summons was served by leaving a copy at his residence in his absence, and because he received no notice of the suit until the day before the commencement of the term.³⁴ A statute which provides that where there is a return of "not found" as to any of the defendants, such return shall be suggested on the record, and the plaintiff may continue the cause as to them for another summons at his option and proceed against the other defendants who were properly served, applies only where the liability is several, or joint and several, and not where the liability is joint only.³⁵ Under a rule of court providing that an appearance to object to the substance or service of the notice shall render any further notice unnecessary, but may entitle the defendant to a continuance if it shall appear to the court that he has not had the full timely notice required, of the substantial cause of action stated in the petition, parties who have appeared in answer to the deficient notice are not entitled to a continuance as of course, if they are notified of the cause of action. If the defect relates only to the time of appearance, ground for continuance must be shown.³⁶ Under a statute declaring that persons jointly or severally liable on the same instrument may be included in the same action, at plaintiff's option, and that where summons is not served on all the defendants when they are severally liable, the plaintiffs may proceed against the defendants served, it was held that it was no ground for continuing a case on defendant's motion that no service of summons had been made or attempted to be made on some of the defendants.³⁷

D. Delay in Filing Pleadings. Delay in filing pleadings in almost every instance operates as a surprise to the opposite party, and on such ground a continuance will usually be granted.³⁸ A party is expected to prepare his pleadings after the evidence is closed and the argument begun. Babcock v. Williams, 10 La. 394.

32. Spencer v. Pierce, 5 R. I. 63; Cabell v. Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., 81 Tex. 104, 16 S. W. 811; Powell v. Haley, 28 Tex. 52; National Bank of Commerce v. Galland, 14 Wash. 502, 45 Pac. 35.

Applications of rule.—The fact that one of two or more partners is not made a party to the suit will not necessitate a continuance as to that one, where the action may proceed to judgment against the parties already before the court. Southmayd v. Baekus, 3 Conn. 474. In an action of trespass to try title which had been pending five years, it was held that a continuance asked by the defendant to make his landlord, who was a non-resident, a party, was properly refused, as defendant could make any defense open to his landlord. Powell v. Haley, 28 Tex. 52. In an action on an indemnity bond it is proper to refuse to continue the cause in order to enable the defendants to make the principals in the indemnity bond parties defendant, where it would be impossible to obtain service on such principals because they are non-residents and no binding judgment could be rendered against them by the court. Cabell v. Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., 81 Tex. 104, 16 S. W. 811.

33. Atlanta, etc., Air-Line R. Co. v. Harrison, 76 Ga. 757 [following Mitchell v. Southwestern, etc., R. Co., 75 Ga. 398].

Mistake of clerk.—Where, on a motion to vacate a judgment for illegality, on the ground that process was not served on defendants, plaintiff asked a continuance and offered to prove by defendants that they in fact intended to waive process, but did not do so through a mistake of the clerk who wrote the acknowledgment of service of the declaration, it was held erroneous to refuse such continuance. Little v. Ingram, 16 Ga. 194.

34. Kelly v. Mason, 4 Ind. 618.

35. Erwin v. Scotten, 40 Ind. 389. But compare Sutton v. Hayes, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 543, holding that where in an action of trespass against three defendants jointly if the writ is returned "not found" as to one, the plaintiff is entitled to a continuance in order that the process might be served on the absent defendant.

36. Des Moines Branch State Bank v. Van, 12 Iowa 523.

37. Lux v. McLeod, 19 Colo. 465, 36 Pac. 246.

before the trial of the cause and where at a late period new pleadings are introduced into the action he must be prepared to grant his adversary additional time to meet the changed conditions.³⁹ The question whether the delay in filing pleadings has operated as such a surprise as to defeat a party's right of preparation is a question within the discretion of the court,⁴⁰ the determination of which is to be arrived at in view of the diligence employed and the means at hand, whereby an alleged surprise might have been avoided.⁴¹ In all such cases, however, to authorize the allowance of a continuance the delayed pleadings must be substantially new and unexpected,⁴² and of such a character that they affect the issues of the action.⁴³

225; Coffeen Coal, etc., Co. v. Kaubrick, 56 Ill. App. 591; Coffeen Coal, etc., Co. v. Barry, 56 Ill. App. 587; Searles v. Lux, 86 Iowa 61, 52 N. W. 327. In Rankin v. Cooper, 1 Browne (Pa.) 253, the attorney for the defendant objected to the jury being sworn on the ground that issue was not properly joined. It was an action of assumpsit; the defendant had pleaded "non assumpsit and payment and a release" to which the plaintiff had replied "non solvit." The attorney for the plaintiff answered that he would reply instante, "non est factum" to the plea of release; which being done, the defendant made affidavit that he was taken by surprise. In this case the court ordered the case continued. See also infra, IV, U, 1.

Denial of itemized account.—The filing on the eve of trial of an affidavit denying an itemized account filed by the adverse party, which operates as a surprise and renders necessary additional evidence affords ground for a continuance. Grimes v. Watkins, 59 Tex. 133.

39. Veatch v. Harbaugh, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,905, 1 Cranch C. C. 402.

Case at issue.—A continuance will not be granted because no declaration is filed in a case that is at issue. Wenn v. Adams, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 156, 1 L. ed. 329; Goodwin v. White, 1 Browne (Pa.) 272. But if at the last calling of a cause for trial the issue be not made up and no rule to plead has been laid, the court will continue the cause at the request of the defendant, although it be the fifth term after the appearance term. Morgan v. Voss, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,811, 1 Cranch C. C. 109.

Judgment for want of proper plea.—Where defendant has been at one term in such default in pleading that plaintiff might have taken judgment for want of proper plea, when defendant at a subsequent term files a proper plea, plaintiff may have a continuance for that cause only. Crew v. Newland, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 135.

Rule for trial or non prosecution.—Where defendant, after procuring a rule for trial or non prosecution at a certain day, before that day files a new plea, the plaintiff will be entitled to a continuance notwithstanding the rule. Halhead v. Ross, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 405, 1 L. ed. 197.

40. Williams v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 50 Iowa 561.

41. A statute allowing service by defendant on plaintiff of demand to serve upon defendant copies of all writings upon which the declaration is founded comprehends actions on contract only, and not actions of ejectment; consequently the failure of plaintiff to respond to a demand given in such an action is no ground for a continuance. Copperthwait v. McCord, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,216, 2 McLean 143.

Motion for more specific statement.—Where plaintiff files with his declaration, ten days before the commencement of the term, a copy of the account sued on, containing the item. "To goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered, $1,000," if the defendant desires a more specific statement of account, he should move for such a statement, and a motion for a continuance on the ground that no copy of the account sued on was filed is properly overruled. Chicago Stamping Co. v. Mechanical Rubber Co., 83 Ill. App. 230.

42. Meredith v. Lackey, 14 Ind. 529; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Schneider, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 260.

Plea in reconvention.—In an action to restrain the enforcement of a judgment, where defendant answers and pleads in reconvention the cause of action on which the judgment was rendered, and the case is called for trial within a few minutes after such plea is filed, plaintiff is entitled to a continuance to prepare a defense to the cross-action. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Schneider, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 260.

Setting up new demand.—After a continuance, and in vacation, the plaintiff amended by bringing in a new defendant. The latter answered setting up a new demand against the original defendant. It was held that the original defendant was entitled to a reasonable continuance to answer that demand, the pleading setting it up being in the nature of a complaint. Meredith v. Lackey, 14 Ind. 529.

43. Where a reply is merely a reiteration of the allegations of a former reply, to which there has been a rejoinder, the fact that the last reply and defendant's rejoinder were filed only a short time before the trial, and that defendant had no notice of such reply, does not entitle defendant to a continuance. Pine Mountain Iron, etc., Co. v. Rice, 32 S. W. 473, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1012.

Setting aside writ of inquiry.—When the writ of inquiry is set aside by the defendant, the plaintiff may have the cause continued at the defendant's costs. McCulloch v. Debutts, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,736, 1 Cranch C. C.

E. Withdrawal of Pleadings. In case the pleadings are withdrawn a short time before trial, it necessarily follows that such party must be prepared to grant his adversary a continuance;⁴⁴ and where a party abandons or withdraws an issue a short time before trial and amends his pleadings, the opposite party is entitled to a continuance.⁴⁵

F. Absence of Papers From File. The absence of papers from the files is a good ground for continuance where there has been no fault or negligence on the part of the applicant;⁴⁶ but their absence or loss is not a ground for continuance when occasioned by the default of the applicant.⁴⁷

G. Failure to File Security For Costs. The mere failure to give security for costs before the commencement of the suit or before the calling of the cause does not of itself furnish any ground for continuance.⁴⁸ It should also be made to appear that the defendant was unprepared to make his defense in consequence of there being no previous security or costs.⁴⁹ It is the duty of the defendant to demand security, if he so desires; and if no such security is demanded within a reasonable time, it is no ground for continuance that such security is not given when the case is called.⁵⁰

H. Incompetency of Jurors. The incompetency of a juror may be the cause of a continuance,⁵¹ and especially is this true where the general panel has been 285; Beck v. Jones, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 1,206, 1 Cranch C. C. 347. So in Wise v. Groverman, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,910, 1 Cranch C. C. 418, it was held that if after a plea of nil debet by the appearance bail the principal comes in and gives special bail and pleads the same plea, the plaintiff was entitled to a continuance of course, as on setting aside a writ of inquiry.

45. Bunding v. Blumenthous, 8 Mo. 695; Dempsey v. Harrison, 4 Mo. 267; Risher v. Thomas, 1 Mo. 739.

46. House v. Greathouse, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 317.

Destruction of papers.—If because of the destruction of papers the defendant has been unable to ascertain the precise nature of the suit he is entitled to a continuance. Suggett v. State Bank, 8 Dana (Ky.) 201.

Documents annexed to petition.—Where plaintiff fails to produce, on a day ordered, certain documents annexed originally to the petition, and his attorney swears that they are lost and that steps have been taken to prove their contents, and there is no presumption that the documents have been withdrawn by plaintiff, the suit should not be dismissed, but a continuance granted. Tucker v. Peebles, 10 La. 403.

Providential cause.—The miscarriage of the mail in the transmission of papers to the clerk is no ground for continuing a cause, unless shown to be from providential cause. Shackelford v. Hays, 3 Ga. 415.

47. Wright v. Clark, 2 Greene (Iowa) 86; Sisk v. American Cent. F. Ins. Co., 95 Mo. App. 695, 69 S. W. 687.

Papers charged to applicant.—Where the original papers in the case, including the deposition of a witness, were lost and stood charged in the clerk's receipt book to the attorney of defendant, who in open court disavowed all knowledge of them and declared his belief that they were returned to the clerk, and the defendant made application for a continuance in order to retake the deposition of said witness, which application was refused, it was held that the court below might well refuse it; since the party making the application ought to satisfy the court that the necessity for it had not been occasioned by his fault. Baker v. Johnson, 16 Tex. 133.

Withdrawal of plea.—It is no ground for continuance that defendant's attorney has withdrawn his plea from the clerk's office and it is lost, and that he is not prepared to establish a copy because he has forgotten the defense and because his client is absent. In such case the court might have properly granted reasonable time, but there is no ground for a continuance. Jones v. Vines, 59 Ga. 491. See also McLoughlin v. King, 56 Ga. 213.

48. Cox v. Hunt, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 146; Smith v. Snoddy, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 382; Clarke v. Rutledge, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 381; Christ v. Mark, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 296; *Cox v. C. 647. It is enough that security be filed before trial. Smith v. Snoddy, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 382 [following Cox v. Fenwick, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 183].

49. Cox v. Hunt, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 146; Cox v. Fenwick, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 183; Graham v. Douglas, Wright (Ohio) 738.

Failure to give security after order.—Where a plaintiff is ordered to give security for costs, and fails so to do until the next term, the defendant at that term is entitled to a continuance. Jacobs v. Sale, Gilm. (Va.) 123.

50. Hawkins v. Willbank, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,247, 4 Wash. 285.

51. Fisher v. Philadelphia, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 395; Young v. Alexandria Mar. Ins. Co., 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,164, 1 Cranch C. C. 566.

discharged;⁵² but where another juror may be substituted the motion should be denied.⁵³

I. Prejudice. Prejudice on the part of the judge⁵⁴ or jury has never been considered a ground of continuance,⁵⁵ nor will a continuance be granted because a report of the recent trial of another cause depending on the facts and principles has been published in a newspaper.⁵⁶

J. Want of Preparation—1. IN GENERAL. While want of preparation, when presented in connection with a reasonable excuse, will sometimes be considered a good ground of continuance,⁵⁷ yet in order to entitle himself to relief for such cause the applicant must show some precise legal or strong equitable reason.⁵⁸ As a general rule applications based upon this ground will be refused,⁵⁹ especially Illness after retirement.—If a juror be taken suddenly ill after the jury have retired, the jury may be discharged and the cause may be continued to the next term. Young v. Alexandria Mar. Ins. Co., 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,164, 1 Cranch C. C. 566.

56. Hurst v. Wickerly, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,940, 1 Wash. 276. See also Willis v. Farrer, 3 Y. & J. 381. It was held in Courier-Journal Co. v. Sallee, 104 Ky. 335, 47 S. W. 226, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 634, that it was no abuse of discretion to refuse a continuance asked by defendant corporation, the publisher of a newspaper, on the ground that prejudice existed against it by a large class of citizens because of its attitude during a recent political campaign.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 14. And see infra, IV, U, 1.

Appointment of guardian ad litem.—Where the court has but just appointed a guardian ad litem, it is a proper exercise of judicial discretion to continue the cause in order to afford an opportunity for that preparation necessary to a fair trial of the cause. Blythe v. Blythe, 25 Iowa 266.

Declaration of adversary.—Where a party has not prepared for trial because, from the declarations of his adversary, he expected a compromise, the court will not order on a trial. Cornogg v. Abraham, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 18.

No opportunity for cross-examination.—If a party has had no opportunity to cross-examine a witness against him whose deposition is taken under the act of congress the court will continue the cause. Dade v. Young, 46 Fed. Cas. No. 3,534, 1 Cranch C. C. 123.

58. Bailey v. Wilner, 107 Ga. 364, 33 S. E. 434; Clark v. Ellithorpe, 7 Kan. App. 337, 51 Pac. 940; Hammond v. Haws, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,002, Wall. Sr. 1. See also Palmer v. Caywood, (Nebr. 1902) 89 N. W. 1034.

Complication of causes.—Where the matters involved in a chancery cause are complicated and important, and owing to the sickness of a party and of her agent, who has had control of her interests, she has been unable to prepare for trial, and since the preceding term, owing to the prevalence of smallpox in the vicinity, and the sickness of her counsel and witnesses, she could not procure the necessary depositions, a continuance should be granted her, although the cause was continued on her motion at the last term. Radford v. Fowlkes, 85 Va. 820, 8 S. E. 817.

59. Georgia.—Bailey v. Wilner, 107 Ga. 364, 33 S. E. 434; Gunn v. Gunn, 95 Ga. 439, 22 S. E. 552; Brown v. Winship, 20 Ga. 693. Illinois.—Pardridge v. Wing, 75 Ill. 236.

West Virginia.—Williams v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 9 W. Va. 33.

United States.—Hammond v. Haws, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,002, Wall. Sr. 1.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 14.

Change of venue.—The neglect of a party to prepare for trial because of the issuance of an order for a change of venue is no ground for a continuance, where the order was not filed in time so as to remove the cause. Shipp v. Gale, Hard. (Ky.) 224.

Poverty as excuse.—Where a defendant in divorce appeared by attorney and asked for alimony, her poverty is not an excuse for failing to prepare for the final hearing. Brotherton v. Brotherton, 41 Iowa 112.

Surprise and inconvenience.—Surprise of where the want of preparation is coupled with unexcusable ignorance⁶⁰ or negligence on the part of the party seeking relief.⁶¹ A continuance should not be granted when it appears that ample time and opportunity for preparation has elapsed before the case was called for a hearing, and the party seeking the continuance had exercised no diligence whatever in even endeavoring to be ready.⁶²

2. CHANGE OF COUNSEL. One of the most frequent causes for alleged want of preparation is found in the employment of new counsel before the date set for trial. The rule in this regard does not vary from the general proposition already laid down. Where the recently retained counsel could have, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, prepared himself for the trial, the application should be denied;⁶³ otherwise the rights of the applicant will be protected and the case postponed.⁶⁴

K. Pendency of Other Actions or Proceedings — 1. IN GENERAL. As a general rule a continuance should be granted upon facts that show that justice requires that the cause should await the trial and conclusion of another suit between the same parties;⁶⁵ but the parties to the two actions must be identione of the counsel of the defendant and personal inconvenience are no grounds for a continuance of a cause, where the other counsel of the defendant is ready, and the want of preparation of the other counsel is merely that he has not examined the papers in the case or considered the questions of law involved. Hogshead v. Baylor, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 99. See also Salina Bank v. Alvord, 32 N. Y. 684.

60. Barnet v. Kennedy, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 239.

Service upon agent.—A person who authorizes an agent to acknowledge service for him of all suits that should be brought against him, returnable to a particular term of the court, cannot continue the case on the ground that he did not know of the institution of the suit, and that he was ignorant of facts which he might have ascertained by examining the complaint on which service was acknowledged, and had not therefore looked up his witnesses and prepared for trial. Brown v. Winship, 20 Ga. 693.

United States.—Greigg v. Reade, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,804, Crabbe 64.

Complicated suit.—A defendant in a suit involving complicated matters, who does not employ counsel for more than eight months from the service of the petition, and who then negotiates with an attorney whose business engagements prevent him from giving immediate attention to the case, is not entitled to a continuance to prepare a defense. Gunn v. Gunn, 95 Ga. 439, 22 S. E. 552.

62. Bailey v. Wilner, 107 Ga. 364, 33 S. E. 434.

63. Pennsylvania Co. v. Rudel, 100 Ill. 603. See also infra, IV, P.

Memoranda for new counsel.—It is not error to refuse a postponement asked for on the ground that new counsel, who have recently been employed in consequence of the death of the original counsel, have not yet been able to obtain papers which were placed in his keeping, and which are important for use on the trial, where such papers are not competent as evidence, but can only be used as memoranda for the information and aid of counsel. Williams v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 9 W. Va. 33.

64. Allen v. Pollad, 22 S. W. 436, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 52; Fenwick v. Brent, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,732, 1 Cranch C. C. 280.

Rights of infants involved.—In an action to set aside a conveyance of land from a father to his children, where the answer presents a valid defense and shows that the rights of infants are involved, a continuance should be awarded to allow proofs to be taken on the father's affidavit that he had just learned that the attorney employed by him to conduct the defense had failed to prepare the case for trial and that he had employed another to do so. Allen v. Pollad, 22 S. W. 436, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 52.

Attachment on trustee process.—Where an heir's interest in the assets of the administrator is attached on trustee process before a decree of distribution is made, the suit may be continued until sufficient opportunity has been given for the settlement of the administrator's account and a decree of distribution. Wheeler v. Bowen, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 563. See also Winthrop v. Carlton, 8 Mass. 456.

Cross-actions pending.—Where cross-actions are pending, either of them may be continued on the defendant's motion until he shall obtain judgment in his action, if he will use due diligence that his judgment may be set off against that of the other party. Winslow v. Hathaway, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 211; Adams v. Manning, 17 Mass. 178.

Delay of judgment.—Where, in an action cal,⁶⁶ the issues must be the same,⁶⁷ and it is essential that the entire relief demanded and sought for in the first action can be awarded in the other.⁶⁸ It seems that the granting of a continuance or motion to stay in such cases is governed by the same rules as in the plea of another action pending,⁶⁹ and the test lies in the fact whether the evidence would support both actions.⁷⁰ The granting or refusal of a stay of proceedings in such cases is in a measure discretionary with the court,⁷¹ but this discretion should not be so extended as to deprive a party of all remedy for his cause of action.⁷²

2. IN STATE AND FEDERAL COURTS. Where suits are pending in the federal and state courts, a continuance of the suit in the state court will not be granted, unless the parties and subject-matter are the same.⁷³ And in a case in the federal circuit court depending upon the local law, a continuance will not be granted to upon a promissory note, it appeared that the defendant had assigned his property in trust to pay the note in suit after certain other debts; that there was no express stipulation in the assignment on the part of the creditors; and that the plaintiff assented to the assignment and claimed the benefit of it, but that it was not executed by him, and that no part of the proceeds had been received by him, it was held that the court might grant a delay of the judgment to give a reasonable time for the property to be converted into money and applied according to the terms of the assignment. Rice v. Catlin, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 221.

Indictment pending.—That the attorney-general is about to proceed by indictment against the defendant has been held good ground for the continuance of a suit growing out of the facts charged in the indictment. Anthony v. Clarke, 1 R. I. 284. But in Johnson v. Wardle, 3 Dowl. P. C. 550, 1 Hurl. & W. 219, it was held that the court would not delay the trial of an action until after the trial of an indictment for perjury in a matter relating to the cause.

Affidavit denying identity of issues.—The rule of Oct. 1, 1887, for the government of the calendar of the circuit court for the southern district of New York, provides that cases must be tried when reached in their regular order according to date of issue and place on the calendar. It was held, on motion to stay the trial of certain cases for the term, on the ground that a case pending in the supreme court involved the same issues, that the rule would not be departed from where the affidavit for the purposes of the motion filed by the defense denied the identity of the issues. Toplitz v. Miller, 32 Fed. 744.

Under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1193, requiring a building contractor to defend at his expense actions brought against the property which was the subject of the contract for work alone or materials furnished by subcontractors, the owner is entitled to set off the expense incurred in defending lien foreclosure suits by subcontractors against the contractor's claim based on a quantum meruit, where the contract was invalid because of the contractor's failure to record it as required by Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, and hence it was error for the court to refuse to continue the contractor's claim until the subcontractor's suits had been determined. Macomber v. Bigelow, 123 Cal. 532, 56 Pac. 449.

Action pending in another state.—It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse a continuance on the ground that another action was pending for the same cause of action in another state, where the court was not requested to grant it until after the jury were impaneled. Hill v. Hill, 51 S. C. 134, 28 S. E. 309.

72. McDonald v. U. S., 42 Wis. 340.

Abuse of discretion.—Where after granting a stay of proceedings in an action for damages caused by flowage, to await the decision in a pending suit against a different defendant by the same plaintiff in the same court for the same damages, the court granted a stay of proceedings in the latter case on the application of the defendant in the former, it was held an abuse of discretion. McDonald v. U. S., 42 Wis. 340.

73. Loring v. Marsh, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,514, 2 Cliff. 311. See also Farnsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 1 N. Y. St. 80, holding, that the trial of an action pending in the state courts will not be postponed on the ground that there is another suit pending in the federal courts involving the same questions, where it appears that the action in the state courts involves additional matters and will have to be tried regardless of the decision of the federal court.

await the construction of the law in a case pending in the state court, since the federal court may determine its construction.⁷⁴ Where actions between the same parties and in relation to the same subject-matter are pending in the state and federal courts, the action in the state court may be continued for a reasonable time to await the determination of the action brought in the federal court, where the subject-matter of the action is peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the court for whose decision the delay is sought.⁷⁵ So it has been held that where after the commencement of a suit in the federal courts, the defendant who claimed under a tax-title filed a bill in the state court against the plaintiff's lessor, a non-resident, and by publication procured a decree of the title, no notice being given to the party nor his counsel in the case of which the defendant had full notice, a continuance of the suit might properly be granted the plaintiff to enable him to reverse the decree in the state court.⁷⁶

3. PROCEEDINGS PENDING IN EQUITY. The question whether a continuance will be granted on the ground that a suit is pending in equity which would determine the rights of the parties is a matter within the discretion of the court,⁷⁷ depending in a large measure upon whether or not a refusal will work injustice to the applicant.⁷⁸ A continuance will not be granted because a suit for the same matter is pending in equity, where a plea of such suit would not avail as an abatement.⁷⁹ Where the same court possesses both equity and common-law jurisdiction, the proper method of securing a postponement of an action at law, on the ground that a suit is pending in equity, is by injunction on the equity side to stay proceedings at law.⁸⁰

4. PENDENCY OF APPEAL. As a general rule it is no ground for a continuance that an appeal has been taken and is pending in another cause between the same parties or between some of the parties and third persons;⁸¹ but it has been held that a continuance may be granted, where a case pending on appeal between some of the parties and a third person involves the determination of a question which is controlling in the case in which a continuance is asked.⁸² Trial courts have ample power, when it is apparent that injustice may be done, to grant continuances until a case pending in the appellate court, sought to be used as a bar or estoppel, is determined.⁸³

76. Calladay v. McKinsey, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,318, 5 McLean 166.

77. Gear v. Shaw, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 608.

Filing of cross-bill.—Where a master's report is made and awaiting confirmation, and the cause is ready for hearing, and a defendant files a cross-bill containing the same allegations as his answer, with a few additional averments of facts known to defendant when his answer was filed, and no reason is shown why the cross-bill was not filed with the answer, it is not error to refuse a continuance until the cross-bill is answered and matured against a new party brought in thereby. A continuance of a cause ready for hearing on the original bill, upon the filing of a cross-bill, is not a matter of right. Phillips v. Edsall, 127 Ill. 535, 20 N. E. 801.

78. Franks v. Wanzer, 25 Miss. 121.

Repeated continuances.—The fact that a suit was pending in a court of equity between the same parties, and involved the same subject-matter, is not ground for granting a continuance in an action at law to a party who had already had repeated continuances. Sanford v. Cloud, 17 Fla. 532.

79. Davis v. Hunt, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 412.

81. Peters v. Banta, 120 Ind. 416, 22 N. E. 95; Cates v. Mayes, (Tex. 1889) 12 S. W. 51.

Review of interlocutory order.—The pendency of attempted review by error proceedings of an order in a case not final is no reason for the postponement of a trial of the cause on its merits. Doolittle v. American Nat. Bank, 58 Nebr. 454, 78 N. W. 926.

82. E. F. Kirwan Mfg. Co. v. Truxton, 1 Pennw. (Del.) 409, 42 Atl. 988.

83. Willard v. Ostrander, 51 Kan. 481, 32 Pac. 1092, 37 Am. St. Rep. 294. Thus, where the appeal has been taken in good faith and sufficient bond given, if the introduction of the judgment in another case would have the effect of permitting the judgment creditor, through the means of another action, to collect his judgment, the trial court should always, on the proper showing being made, continue the trial until after the case pending in the appellate court has been determined. Standard Implement Co. v. Stevens, 51 Kan. 530, 33 Pac. 366.

Breach of executor's bond.—Where the

L. Proceedings to Enjoin Actions. A court of law may in a proper case grant a continuance to allow a party who has an equitable defense to enjoin the proceedings at law.⁸⁴ The court is vested with discretion in the matter,⁸⁵ but should allow no continuance where there has been an unreasonable delay or lack of diligence.⁸⁶

M. Proceedings For Discovery. Under a statute of Indiana providing that either party may propound interrogatories to be filed with the pleadings relative to the matter in controversy, and require the opposite party to answer the same under oath, and that the court may enforce the answer by attachment or otherwise, it has been held that the mere failure to answer interrogatories filed with pleadings is no cause for a continuance;⁸⁷ in case of a refusal or neglect to answer, an attachment should be taken out, and the party in default in answering will not be allowed to object to the delay occasioned by his own default because an attachment was not issued at an earlier date.⁸⁸ By the express provisions of the Alabama statute, if answers to interrogatories are not filed in time, are not sufficiently full or are evasive, it is within the discretion of the court either to attach the party and cause him to answer fully in open court or continue the cause until further answers are made or direct a nonsuit or judgment by default to be entered.⁸⁹ Under the Georgia statute where interrogatories are prepared, filed, and commission attached, and where notice of the same has been duly given, if the discovery sought is material and such as the law requires to be made, if it be not made, a continuance at the instance of the opposite party should be granted.⁹⁰ In no event, however, should a continuance be granted, unless there has been a compliance with the statute to compel discovery.⁹¹ A suit at law should not be delayed because a bill of discovery filed in aid thereof has not been answered, where there has been undue delay in seeking the discovery.⁹² Nor principal breach alleged in an action on the bond of a non-resident executor is the failure to comply with a decree of the surrogate for the payment of money, and an appeal has been taken to the court of appeals from a judgment of the supreme court affirming such decree, the action will, on application of the surety, be stayed till the determination of the appeal. Hood v. Hayward, 3 N. Y. St. 153.

Amendment of bill for injunction.—Where defendant's bill to enjoin an action at law was held insufficient for want of an averment which the party could have made, and his counsel moved for a continuance of the action at law until he could amend the same, it was held that the motion should have been allowed. *Dudley v. Interrogatories in another state.—It has been held that a continuance should be granted to obtain an answer from another state to material interrogatories, although the court is ignorant as to whether the state provides compulsory process to compel a witness resident there to answer interrogatories from another state. Johnson v. Baldwin, 30 Ga. 816. But in another case it was held that a continuance would not be granted to enable a party by proceedings for contempt in the courts of another state to compel a witness to testify there by deposition. Stratton v. Dole, 45 Nebr. 472, 63 N. W. 875.

Swearingen*, Wright (Ohio) 108, where it was said that if the party hold back his bill for a discovery until the cause is called for trial, and he would wait for the answer, it is incumbent upon him to excuse his delay and show cause why time should be given him.

Affidavit must excuse delay.—Where a defendant, after answer filed, files interrogatories to the plaintiff just before the commencement of the term, under circumstances rendering it impossible for the plaintiff to answer them at that term, the defendant's affidavit for a continuance on the ground that the answers are material to his defense should account satisfactorily for the delay in propounding the interrogatories. Hipp v. Robb, 7 Tex. 67.

N. Proceedings to Take Depositions. A continuance will usually be granted to allow a party to take depositions,⁹⁴ if the testimony sought is material,⁹⁵ and the applicant has been guilty of no negligence in procuring the desired evidence.⁹⁶ Every party is expected to prepare his case for trial before the cause is reached, and where depositions are necessary for the proper presentation of his cause, he must take the proper legal measures to secure them by the issuance of a commission,⁹⁷ and such personal supervision as the exigencies of the case may require.⁹⁸ The question as to what will constitute due diligence in any particular

Under Iowa Code (1873), § 2742, as amended by Acts 17th Gen. Assembl. c. 145, providing that in equitable actions wherein issue of fact is joined the court may order the evidence to be taken in the form of depositions, or either party may take his testimony by depositions, and section 2745 providing that the appearance term shall not be the trial term for equitable actions, except those brought for divorce, to foreclose mortgages, etc., it was held that in actions to foreclose mortgages the court may, on request of a party at the appearance term, order the evidence to be taken in the form of depositions and grant a continuance for the purpose. *Holbrook v. Alleged fraud of adverse party.—Where a commission to France has been issued, but not returned for two years, affidavit of defendant's counsel that he believes the delay is caused by the act of the plaintiff is not sufficient ground for continuing the trial. Bouchereau v. Le Guen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 196.

New commission.—Where a commission had been obtained to procure the evidence of a witness, and, on a rule taken on the opposite party to show cause why the depositions should not be read on the trial of the cause, the objection was made that they were not signed by the deponent, and this objection was sustained by the court, it was held that in the absence of any neglect attributable to the party taking out the commission he was entitled to a new commission, and to a continuance of the cause in the meantime. *Tarleton v. case depends upon the facts and circumstances presented to the court.⁹⁹ To authorize a suit to be continued on account of an outstanding commission, it must appear that no unnecessary delay was suffered to intervene after the commencement of the suit, for a party can never take advantage of his own negligence.¹

O. Absence of Parties — 1. IN GENERAL. It is unquestionably an important privilege of a party to be present at the trial of his cause, which should not be denied on a proper application made, unless for weighty reasons;² but the mere desire of a party to be present at the trial of his case, or the desire of his attorney to have him there, is not a sufficient reason in itself for a continuance of the case.³

Commission of adversary.—A party cannot claim a continuance for the non-return of his adversary's commission. St. Joseph's College v. Lee, 4 La. 228.

Commission on terms.—Where a party procures a commission to take testimony on the terms that whether it be returned or not the cause shall not on that account be continued at the next term, yet, if it be returned executed at the next term, the adverse party has a right to a continuance till he can examine the testimony, that he may have opportunity to disprove it, if he deems it necessary. Norwood v. Owings, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 296.

Notice of trial.—It is no objection to giving notice of the trial of a cause that there is a commission to take depositions out, but if there has not been sufficient time for the return of the commission the judge will postpone the trial without costs. Stokes v. Garr, 17 N. J. L. 451.

2. Pate v. Tait, 72 Ind. 450.

After several continuances at request of opposite party.—In Mayton v. Guild, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 29 S. W. 218, upon the case being called, plaintiff's counsel stated that his client, who lived in another city, had been notified by letter of the date of the trial, but had not appeared, and that counsel could not go to trial without his actual presence; that the case had been called at previous terms; and that plaintiff had always been present and ready for trial, but that the case had always been continued at defendant's instance. Under such circumstances it was held that in denying that request and dismissing the suit for want of prosecution the court erred.

Principal on note.—An action against the sureties on a note alone, judgment having already been rendered against the principal, will not be continued because the latter is absent for providential cause, although the counsel for the sureties state that they cannot go safely to trial without such principal, such counsel further stating that they did not represent him in the case. *Lumpkin v. Such a desire may grow out of mere curiosity, or from the mere general interest any party to litigation has in its results, without any expectation of the party being able himself, in any way, by his presence and counsel, to give material aid in the case.⁴ A party is bound to attend to the trial of his cause at his own peril,⁵ and the granting or refusal of a continuance on account of absence depends upon the sufficiency of the excuse presented.⁶ In the absence of a reasonable and sufficient excuse, the usual rule should be adhered to and the party left to suffer the Arrival during trial.—Where a postponement of a trial was asked until a certain hour to procure the attendance of the defendants as witnesses in their own behalf, and refused, and the trial extended beyond the hour, and one of the defendants arrived after the hour and testified, it was held no error to refuse the request. Hazen v. Pierson, 83 Ill. 241.

Continuance procured by fraud.—It is no error to refuse to continue the case after the setting aside of a continuance procured through fraud, on the ground that counsel for the movant, after the first continuance was granted, notified his clients that they need not appear on the day set for the trial, and for that reason they were not present. Hunt v. Listenberger, 14 Ind. App. 320, 42 N. E. 240, 964.

Preponderance of evidence.—That an absent party defendant was a necessary witness in order that the defendants should have the preponderance of evidence on a certain disputed fact is insufficient ground for continuance. Cochrane v. Parker, 12 Colo. App. 169, 54 Pac. 1027.

4. Paulucci v. Verity, 1 Kan. App. 121, 40 Pac. 927. See also Harris v. Rose, 26 Ill. App. 237. In Trevelyan v. Lofft, 83 Va. 141, 1 S. E. 901, an administrator appeared before the commissioner appointed for the purpose of making a settlement of his account, but refused to settle his accounts as agent of the intestate, and without settling either account went to England and was unable to return for eighteen months. In the meantime the accounts were made up, and on the entry of the decree a continuance was asked, on the ground that because of his illness and absence he had been prevented from attending in person and submitting his evidence. It was held that the continuance was properly denied, because his personal attendance was not necessary to a fair settlement, as all of his books and papers were accessible to his counsel, and his act in leaving the state was voluntary.

5. Raby v. Brown, 14 La. 247; West v. Hennessey, 63 Minn. 378, 65 N. W. 639.

Conscientious objections to day of trial.—The conscientious scruples of a Jew to appear and attend to the trial of his cause on Saturday is no ground for a continuance. Philips v. Gratz, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 412, 23 Am. Dec. 33.

Oath to amended plea.—In Hannah v. Chadwick, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 517, exceptions to defendant's special plea having been sustained, he was granted leave to amend, and the trial of the cause was postponed two days to enable him to prepare his amendment. When the cause was again called, defendant's counsel made application to continue on the ground that defendant was absent from court, and that his counsel had used diligence to inform him that his presence at court was necessary to make oath to the truth of the matters alleged in the amended plea. Under such circumstances it was held that the application was properly overruled, as it was defendant's duty to be present at court, and give attention to his defense.

6. Light v. Richardson, (Cal. 1893) 31 Pac. 1123.

No instruction as to future attendance.—In Light v. Richardson, (Cal. 1893) 31 Pac. 1123, the defendant and his witnesses were present at the time fixed for trial, but his attorney was absent from sickness. The court stated that the case would be continued on that account, and the defendant and his witnesses left without instructions as to future attendance. The next day the attorney was still sick, and the defendant and his witnesses did not appear. Under such circumstances it was held that the absence of defendant and his witnesses was excusable, and that a continuance should have been granted.

The absence of a party must be accounted for before a cause will be continued on this ground. Helm v. Voils, 58 Kan. 816, 49 Pac.

consequences of his own neglect.⁷ The presence of a party to an action to aid and assist his counsel in the trial of the cause is not ordinarily considered essential; and the absence of a party, not as a witness, but simply as an aid to counsel, is rarely regarded as a ground for continuance.⁸ It must be made to appear that the presence of the absent party is indispensable to a fair trial of the merits of the cause,⁹ that injustice may result to the applicant in the event of a refusal of the delay,¹⁰ and that a postponement is not asked for the mere purpose of delay.¹¹

2. ON BUSINESS. Absence on business of an ordinary character is no ground for a postponement;¹² and even absence from the state will not ordinarily be considered a sufficient ground,¹³ unless some good excuse in addition is alleged as the reason for the non-appearance.¹⁴

11. Schaffer v. Schaffer, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 544, 24 N. Y. St. 645.

Delay a question for court.—After several ineffectual attempts by plaintiff to have the trial of her action postponed the cause was marked ready for trial, without objection by her attorneys. When it was reached for trial, her attorney again applied for further postponement on the ground of her illness, and a postponement was had for three days to enable defendants to ascertain the true condition of her health. Subsequently affidavits were produced and oral evidence taken, and the trial judge, being satisfied that plaintiff's application was merely for delay, refused further postponement and allowed defendants to take a dismissal. Under such circumstances it was held that the exercise of the trial court's discretion would not be interfered with, particularly as it did not appear but that the plaintiff could begin a new action by paying costs. Schaffer v. Schaffer, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 544, 24 N. Y. St. 645.

Divorce proceedings.—While the trial court should be most liberal in granting continuances in divorce cases, because the public as well as the parties to the action are interested in the result of the suit, a defendant must be held to the exercise of good faith and diligence, and cannot be heard to complain if the failure to present his defense results from an attempt to subordinate the business of the court to his own business engagements and convenience. Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 293, 16 L. R. A. 600.

Absence at commencement of suit.—By statute in some jurisdictions, where the defendant is out of the state at the time the suit is commenced against him, and does not return before the time for trial, the action must be continued. Stoyel v. Westcott, 3 Day (Conn.) 349; Blanchard v. Wild, 1 Mass. 342.

Cause reached on irregular call of docket.—On calling a cause for trial, defendant's attorney objected to pleading or going to trial, on the grounds set forth in his affidavit, that some three weeks before defendant had applied to him to know if the cause would be tried during that term, that he told him that from the crowded state of the docket he did not think it possible, that another attorney told defendant the same thing, that, upon that belief, defendant had left the state on business without preparing for trial

3. BECAUSE OF ILLNESS OF PARTY. The illness of a party is not ipso facto a cause for continuance of the cause;¹⁵ but where a party's presence at the trial is indispensable and the character of his illness is such as to render his presence at the trial impossible a continuance should be granted,¹⁶ if it appears that he has been guilty of no negligence.¹⁷ A continuance is properly refused where it appears that the party is not too ill to attend trial.¹⁸ The fact of illness must be established by some satisfactory sworn statement,¹⁹ either in the shape of an affidavit²⁰ further than speaking to an attorney to appear for him, and that he had not returned. The affiant also showed that the cause had been reached by an irregular call of the docket, whereby many contested cases had been passed over, and not tried, continued, or disposed of, in which the parties were demanding trials, and which if tried would have consumed the whole term. Under such circumstances it was held that a continuance should have been granted. Donallen v. Lennox, 6 Dana (Ky.) 89.

Temporary absence.—Where defendants are guilty of no unreasonable delay in filing their answers, their motion, made before the cause is set for trial, for a continuance to the next term of court, will be granted, upon affidavit showing that the principal defendant—the manager of the business out of which the suit grew, and the person with whom all the transactions were had—is necessarily, but only temporarily, absent from the state. Robertson v. Woolley, 6 Wash. 156, 32 Pac. 1060.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 42.

Illness of copartner.—It is no error to refuse a continuance asked by one of two defendants sued as copartners, where the only showing is that defendant, who was a non-resident of the state, desired to attend the trial, but was unable to do so on account of sickness. Paulucci v. Verity, 1 Kan. App. 121, 40 Pac. 927.

Party actually present.—A judgment will not be disturbed for error in refusing a continuance on account of the illness of a party, if it appears that such party was in fact present and testified on the trial. Pick v. Ketchum, 73 Ill. 366.

16. Mathews v. Willoughby, 85 Ga. 289, 11 S. E. 620; Connell v. Sharpe, 32 Ga. 443; McMahan v. Norick, (Okla. 1902) 69 Pac.

1047. See also Elliott v. Field, 21 Colo. 378, 41 Pac. 504. In Mathews v. Willoughby, 85 Ga. 289, 11 S. E. 620, it was held error to refuse a continuance when counsel stated that he could not go to trial without his client's presence, and presented the affidavit of a physician that he had visited the client on the previous day, that he had pneumonia, and would be unable to attend court for five or six days—also the affidavit of another person that he had seen the client the morning of the trial, and that he was very sick and unable to come to court.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that whenever application is made for the continuance of a cause, on account of the illness of a party and witness, unless it clearly appears on the day of the trial that the illness is too severe to admit of the taking of a deposition it is entirely proper to refuse relief; the most the court can do in such case is to hold the case over until the deposition can be taken. Smith v. Cunningham, 9 Phila. 96, 30 Leg. Int. 12.

Hearsay evidence.—An affidavit that a third person had told the affiant that defendant was sick is insufficient to show such sickness as ground for continuance. McClellan v. Gaston, 18 Wash. 472, 51 Pac. 1062.

Unverified letter.—The court properly directed a cause, regularly reached, to proceed to trial in the absence of defendant and his counsel, where the only showing accounting for such absence was an unverified letter of defendant requesting a continuance because of his sudden illness. Hamill v. Hall, 4 Colo. App. 290, 35 Pac. 927.

Unverified message.—In Westfield v. Westfield, 19 S. C. 85, where, on the calling of the calendar, the appellant was present and acting as his counsel, and the case was set for the next day to suit his convenience, and on the next day he sent a message to the judge saying that he was unwell and unable to appear, and an officer was denied admission to the house, a notice that the judge would proceed to try the case in his absence at a certain hour was held sufficient indulgence.

or the certificate of a physician that satisfies the court of the inability of the party to be present.²¹ From the very nature of the relief asked the decision of the question must necessarily rest almost entirely within the discretion of the trial court,²² and such discretion will not be interfered with unless the same has been abused to the extent of prejudicing the applicant's right to a fair trial of the cause.²³

4. BECAUSE OF ILLNESS IN FAMILY. The granting of a continuance for illness in the family of a party to the cause is a matter within the discretion of the trial court, and such discretion will not be reviewed where the circumstances of the case are not such as to show that it has been abused.²⁴

5. ABSENCE IN PUBLIC SERVICE — a. In General. Inability of a party to be present at the trial, because of absence in the public service, does not as matter of right entitle him to a continuance;²⁵ nevertheless, the court may in its discretion grant a continuance for this reason.²⁶ and it seems to be customary to do so.²⁷

Conflicting evidence.—Where there was much evidence pro and con as to whether an absent party "was able to attend court, and what was his condition," the discretion of a trial judge in refusing to continue a case on the ground of the sickness of such party will not be interfered with; and the fact that on the hearing of a motion for a new trial in the case affidavits were read tending to show that the absent party was in fact sick at the date of the trial will not change the rule. Fletcher v. Collins, 111 Ga. 253, 36 S. E. 646.

23. Fletcher v. Collins, 111 Ga. 253, 36 S. E. 646; Harris v. Rose, 26 Ill. App. 237; Beard v. Mackey, 51 Kan. 131, 32 Pac. 921; McClurg v. Igleheart, 33 S. W. 80, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 913.

No bona fide defense shown.—In Beard v. Mackey, 51 Kan. 131, 32 Pac. 921, a postponement of a trial on account of the absence of defendant, who it was alleged was unable to attend by reason of personal injuries, was asked. In the affidavit for continuance the inability of defendant to attend was shown, and it was stated that no defense could be made without his personal attendance. There had been a previous trial, and it was not shown that defendant had a bona fide defense, that he was a witness to any material fact, or possessed of any knowledge not shared by his counsel. Under such circumstances it was held that the overruling of the motion was not such an abuse of discretion as to justify a reversal.

Several continuances.—It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse defendant a continuance on the ground that he is not in a physical condition to attend court, where there have been several postponements at his instance, and it is not stated that he expects to testify or that his presence is necessary. Townsend v. Rhea, 38 S. W. 865, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 901. See also Rubens v. Mead, (Cal. 1898) 53 Pac. 432, holding that there is no error in denying continuance because of defendant's sickness; there having been a previous continuance on this ground, on stipulation that there should be no further postponement on that ground, and it not appearing that defendant's presence would have been of any avail.

24. Skinner v. Bryce, 75 N. C. 287.

Counter-affidavits.—Denying a continuance because of sickness of defendant's wife is not an abuse of discretion, where the only affidavit in support of the motion was a physician's affidavit, made five days before, wherein the opinion was expressed that defendant could not safely leave home more than six hours at a time for a week, and a counter-affidavit alleged that three days after the physician's affidavit was made defendant went eight miles from his home on business and that his home was not more than ten miles from the place of holding court. *Matthews v. b. Under Special Statutory Provision. In some states continuances are provided for by statute in cases where parties are engaged in public service;²⁸ but it seems that in such cases the party must claim his privileges of postponement, and when he fails to do so it will constitute a waiver which will conclude him.²⁹

6. ABSENCE BECAUSE OF IMPRISONMENT. The court may grant a continuance where a party has been confined without the limits of the state, or where for any reason he has had no opportunity to instruct his counsel in his defense;³⁰ but no continuance will be granted where ample opportunity for the preparation of the defense has existed and has been neglected by the party and his attorney.³¹

7. ABSENCE BECAUSE OF ATTENDANCE ON ANOTHER COURT. Attendance on another court has never been considered a good cause for continuance.³²

8. ABSENCE BECAUSE OF INCORRECT STATEMENT OF ADVERSARY. Where defendant and his leading counsel are not present at the trial because of an incorrect statement of plaintiff, he should be granted a continuance, and a refusal to do so is an abuse of discretion.³³

P. Absence of Counsel — 1. IN GENERAL. Absence of counsel is an excuse little favored by the courts as a ground for a continuance,³⁴ and in most cases a continuance for such cause will be refused.³⁵ Especially is this the case where no

28. Iowa.—By statute absence in the military service of the United States is made a ground of continuance for the defendant, where it is made to appear that the defendant's presence is in any degree necessary for a full and fair trial of the cause. Iowa Laws (1862), c. 109; Iowa Laws (1861), c. 7; Clark v. Woodbury, 23 Iowa 61; McCormick v. Rusck, 15 Iowa 127, 83 Am. Dec. 401; Butler v. McCall, 15 Iowa 430; Lucas v. Casady, 12 Iowa 567. By Laws (1864), c. 19, the benefits of the act were extended to both plaintiffs and defendants. Clark v. Woodbury, 23 Iowa 61. In an action against a firm, one member of which was in the military service of the United States, his copartner appeared and admitted a portion of the plaintiff's claim, and judgment was rendered therefor. It was held on appeal that under the statutes a defendant in the military service of the United States was entitled to a continuance of the action against him during such service, and that a continuance as to one of the firm operated as a continuance against both, and that said judgment should be reversed. Butler v. McCall, 15 Iowa 430.

Missouri.—Donnell v. Stephens, 35 Mo. 441 [modifying Bruns v. Crawford, 34 Mo. 330]. Acts (1861), p. 46, relating to suits against persons in the military service, and Acts (1863), p. 30, do not prohibit the commencement of suits against a party in the military service, but stay their prosecution for the time limited. Donnell v. Stephens, 35 Mo. 441.

29. Johnson v. Offutt, 4 Mete. (Ky.) 19; Geyer v. Irwin, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 107, 1 L. ed. 762. In Johnson v. Offutt, supra, at page 21, the court said: "To give the statute that effect, the court, whenever a member is sued, must take judicial notice of the fact, and of its own motion dismiss or continue the cause, which would be impossible. The defendant, to take advantage of his privilege, must show that he is a member; and it can give him but little additional trouble to prepare an answer, if he has a defense, and an affidavit that he cannot prepare for trial without neglecting his legislative duties, or an affidavit showing that he has a defense, but cannot prepare his answer without such neglect; in either of which cases he should have a continuance. But if he has no defense, the rendition of a judgment against him is not in our opinion such a disturbance as the statute was designed to prohibit.

30. Springer v. Mendenhall, 3 Harr. (Del.) 381.

Solitary confinement.—Where a party was serving a sentence of solitary confinement and counsel were not permitted to see him, a continuance was held proper. Chandler v. Barker, 2 Harr. (Del.) 316.

31. Springer v. Mendenhall, 3 Harr. (Del.) 381.

32. Green v. Gunn, 95 Ga. 439, 22 S. E. 552.

Service as grand juror.—Even where the party asking the continuance has been summoned and sworn as a juror in another court the continuance was denied. Goodwin v. White, 1 Browne (Pa.) 272.

33. Richardson v. Boyd, 69 Ark. 368, 63 S. W. 789.

34. Lightner v. Menzel, 35 Cal. 452; Cotton States L. Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 74 Ga. 220; McKay v. Marine Ins. Co., 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 384; Hammond v. Haws, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,002, 1 Wall. Sr. 1.

diligence in procuring his attendance is shown,⁸⁶ or where the cause is of such a nature that it could be tried by another attorney without special preparation.⁸⁷ In all such cases, however, where provision for continuance is not expressly made by statute or rule of court,⁸⁸ the granting of a postponement is a matter of discretion with the court, and may be allowed where the circumstances are such as will justify the additional allowance of time.⁸⁹

Tennessee.—State v. Frost, 103 Tenn. 685, 54 S. W. 986.

Texas.—Page v. Arnim, 29 Tex. 53; Hagerty v. Scott, 10 Tex. 525; Watkins v. Atwell, (Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 404.

Washington.—Catlin v. Harris, 7 Wash. 542, 35 Pac. 385; Skagit R., etc., Co. v. Cole, 2 Wash. 57, 25 Pac. 1077.

United States.—Hammond v. Haws, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,002, Wall. Sr. 1.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 51.

Absence with papers.—The mere absence of counsel with the papers of the defendant is not a sufficient ground for the continuance of a cause. Horshaw v. Cook, 16 Ga. 526. So the fact that the absent attorney has in his possession letters which would establish the defense does not of itself establish a ground for continuance. Hook v. Teasley, 72 Ga. 901.

Business engagements of counsel are no cause for continuance. Burchard v. Boyce, 21 Ga. 6; Jackson v. Wakeman, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 578. In Olden v. Litzenburg, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 204, 8 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 106, it was held that the professional business that forms a legal ground for the continuance of a cause is confined to an engagement in another court and does not comprehend a professional engagement in another city. See infra, IV, P. 5.

Executor newly made party.—An executor who has just been made a party to a pending action will not be granted a continuance because of the unexpected absence of counsel without leave of absence. Haley v. Evans, 60 Ga. 157.

36. Whitehall v. Lane, 61 Ind. 93; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Holladay, 131 Mo. 440, 33 S. W. 49. In Boyd v. Leith, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 618, a party seeking a continuance because of absence of counsel had three attorneys, two of whom were absent; and neither offered to show the cause of their absence, nor that it was unavoidable, and the attorney present swore to the cause of their absence on information and belief only. The motion set up equitable reasons for the continuance, which was largely in the court's discretion. It was held that the continuance was properly refused.

37. Graff v. Brown, 85 Ill. 89; Jarvis v. Shacklock, 60 Ill. 378; Belck v. Belck, 97 Ind. 73.

Allegations of affidavit.—An affidavit for continuance on the ground that new counsel was not familiar with the defense must show that sufficient time had not elapsed after the withdrawal of former counsel for the new counsel to have become familiar therewith. Miller v. Harker, 96 Ind. 234.

Complaining party an attorney.—It is not reversible error to refuse a motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a counsel and of documents, where the action is a simple one, the complaining party is himself an attorney, and it is not shown that the missing documents constitute material evidence. Keegan v. Donnelly, 11 Colo. App. 31, 52 Pac. 292.

38. Hill v. Clark, 51 Ga. 122.

Under Greater New York Charter, § 1377, providing that the rules of the supreme court shall apply to municipal courts, where an attorney, pursuant to rule 5 of the supreme court, applies to a municipal court for adjournment and presents an affidavit that he is actually engaged in the supreme court, the justice errs in not granting it. Marsh v. Nassau Show-Case Co., 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 837, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 1083.

Georgia.—Callaway v. Douglasville College, 99 Ga. 623, 25 S. E. 850.

Illinois.—St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Teters, 68 Ill. 144.

Indiana.—Belck v. Belck, 97 Ind. 73.

Kansas.—Christian Churches Educational Assoc. v. Hitchcock, 4 Kan. 36.

Nebraska.—Corbett v. National Bank of Commerce, 44 Nebr. 230, 62 N. W. 445.

England.—Bearblock v. Tyler, 1 Jac. & W. 225.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 51 et seq.

Refusal to participate in trial.—In Skagit R., etc., Co. v. Cole, 2 Wash. St. 57, 25 Pac. 1077, the trial of a cause began in the absence of defendant's principal counsel, with the expectation that he would arrive before any material progress had been made. Dur-

2. ABSENCE BECAUSE OF ILLNESS. It is usually considered a good ground for continuance that the counsel employed is too ill to conduct the cause when the same is called for a hearing,⁴⁰ but in such case it must appear that the particular counsel was necessary to the proper presentation of the cause,⁴¹ and that there ing the trial defendant asked for a continuance on the ground of his absence, stating that grave apprehensions were entertained that he had been drowned, which was subsequently ascertained to be the fact. Plaintiff opposed the continuance on the ground that the absent counsel had refused to participate in the trial because plaintiff had counseled with him before the commencement of the action as to the matters in controversy therein. It was held that the refusal of the trial court to grant the continuance was not such an abuse of discretion as would justify a reversal of the judgment. So where an attorney notified his client that he could not attend on the day set for trial, it was held no abuse of discretion to deny the motion. Catlin v. Harris, 7 Wash. 542, 35 Pac. 385.

Substitution of attorneys.—If an attorney be absent under such circumstances as to entitle his client to a continuance on that ground, his substitution of another attorney in his general business is not binding on his clients, so as to deprive them of their continuance. Dalton City Co. v. Dalton Mfg. Co., 33 Ga. 243.

Abuse of discretion.—In Hanson v. Michelson, 19 Wis. 498, after the cause was called (the defendant not appearing), and after the plaintiff's evidence was in, an attorney appeared for the defendant (not being his attorney of record), and applied for a postponement of a few days until his witnesses could be produced, on the ground that through neglect of the attorneys whom he had employed to attend to the cause he had not been informed that it had been noticed for trial at that term, until after the trial commenced. Under such circumstances it was held that if a judgment had been rendered against the defendant before such application he would have been entitled to relief from it, under Wis. Rev. Stat. c. 125, § 38, and therefore it was an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse the application.

Virginia.—Myers v. Trice, 86 Va. 835, 11 S. E. 428.

United States.—Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 11 Pet. 226, 9 L. ed. 697; Rumford Chemical Works v. Hecker, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,131, 1 Ban. & A. 135; Shultz v. Moore, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,825, 1 McLean 334.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 52.

Convenience of jurors.—The fact that a trial judge consults the convenience of jurors in denying a motion made by the defendant's counsel for an adjournment on account of his illness does not constitute reversible error, where the judge finally assumes the responsibility of deciding the motion and it appears that the defendant's side of the controversy was fully argued and presented with great ability. McCready v. Lindenborn, 37 N. Y. App. Div. 425, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 54 [affirming 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 606, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 46].

41. Tipton County v. Brown, 4 Ind. App. 238, 30 N. E. 925.

After extension of time.—A motion for a continuance on the ground of the severe illness of defendant's attorney who had charge of the case from the commencement, and previous cases involving the same subject-matter, where the facts were shown by affidavits and certificate of a physician, was granted, where made at the first term after joinder of issue, although defendant's time had been extended upon condition that the cause should be put on the calendar and argued at such time as the court would hear it. Rumford Chemical Works v. Hecker, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,131, 1 Ban. & A. 135.

Attorney present in court.—The refusal to continue a case on account of the inflamed condition of the attorney's eyes is not an abuse of the court's discretion, where he was before the court at the time and immediately proceeded to conduct the trial of the case in person. Hawes v. Clark, 84 Cal. 272, 24 Pac. 116. But a refusal to grant a continuance where an attorney is too ill to attend is erroneous, even though he had sufficiently recovered to be present before the case was actually tried. Rice v. Melendy, 36 Iowa 166.

Competent assistance.—Refusal to adjourn over a day for illness of counsel is not error, where such counsel had competent assistance and his client was not prejudiced thereby. McCready v. Lindenborn, 37 N. Y. App. Div. 425, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 54 [affirming 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 606, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 46].

Rights protected.—Where it appears from the record brought to the appellate court that just prior to the trial of the case in which the continuance was asked another case had been heard before the district court exactly similar, and in which exactly the same points were discussed and considered, and it further appears that the interests of the complaining party were fully protected by the district court in the rendition of the judgment, and that his rights at the trial were not in any manner injuriously affected, the appellate court will not reverse the judgment of the district court for proceeding to hear and dis-

was no time or opportunity to employ other counsel to conduct it.⁴² A continuance will not be granted on the mere statement of a party that his attorney is too ill to be present,⁴³ or on an unverified certificate of a physician.⁴⁴ So an affidavit for continuance on this ground should state when the party expects to produce his attorney in court to conduct the case.⁴⁵

3. ABSENCE BECAUSE OF ILLNESS IN FAMILY. The allowance of an application for a continuance, based on the fact of illness in the family of the acting attorney, is usually a matter in the discretion of the trial court; but such application will generally be denied, especially where there is shown no diligence in preparing otherwise for trial.⁴⁶

4. ABSENCE IN PUBLIC SERVICE. The absence of an attorney in the public service of his state or county is usually a good ground of continuance, whether such service be civil⁴⁷ or military;⁴⁸ and provision for such cases has in some instances been made by statute.⁴⁹ Wherever such right is claimed, whether based upon statute or otherwise, the affidavit is usually required to state that the presence of the attorney is necessary to a fair trial of the cause.⁵⁰ If the application is based on the ground that the attorney is a member of the legislature, it pose of the case in the absence of counsel. Markson v. Ide, 29 Kan. 700.

42. Condon v. Brockway, 157 Ill. 90, 41 N. E. 634 [affirming 50 Ill. App. 625]; Jarvis v. Shacklock, 60 Ill. 378.

Diligence on part of applicant.—In Thompson v. Thornton, 41 Cal. 626, the defendant's attorney was taken ill on the morning of the trial and informed the defendant that he could not try his case, but advised him that he had a good defense on the merits. The defendant endeavored to obtain other counsel to conduct his case, but was unsuccessful. Under such circumstances it was held that the application for a continuance was improperly denied.

Expectation of trial.—Where the ground of a motion for continuance is that the attorney cannot try the case by reason of sickness, it should be shown when the attorney will be able to try the case, and where this is not shown, and there has been sufficient time to employ other counsel, the application should be denied. Condon v. Brockway, 50 Ill. App. 625. So where a case had been pending eight years, and further preparation was not desired or expected, the absence of the principal counsel at the hearing because of sickness, it appearing by the affidavit of the clerk that the absent counsel had not been at that court for two years, was held no ground for a motion for a continuance. Adams v. Adams, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 167.

43. Hunt v. O'Brien, 59 Ill. App. 321.

44. Randall v. United L., etc., Ins. Assoc., 14 N. Y. Suppl. 631, 39 N. Y. St. 155.

45. Lamar v. McDaniel, 78 Ga. 547, 3 S. E. 409; Smith v. Printup, 59 Ga. 610.

Probable object delay.—An affidavit of the indisposition of principal counsel, without any allegation that he was in possession of papers necessary on the trial, will be disregarded, where from the circumstances delay is probably the object. Hooper v. Hyams, 1 Rob. (La.) 90.

46. Finch v. Billings, 22 Iowa 228.

47. Ware v. Jerseyville, 158 Ill. 234, 41 N. E. 736; Chicago Public Stock Exch. v.

McClaghry, 148 Ill. 372, 36 N. E. 88; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Teters, 68 Ill. 144; Harrigan v. Turner, 53 Ill. App. 292; Patin v. Poydras, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 593.

Recent substitution.—Where a party applies for a continuance on a showing that his counsel is in attendance on the legislature as a member thereof, he is entitled to a continuance as of right, although it may also appear that the attorney was substituted of record in place of another only six days before the session began. Chicago Public Stock Exch. v. McClaghry, 148 Ill. 372, 36 N. E. 88 [reversing 50 Ill. App. 358].

48. Dalton City Co. v. Dalton Mfg. Co., 33 Ga. 243. See also Wicker v. Boynton, 83 Ill. 545 [citing and explaining Duncan v. Niles, 32 Ill. 541].

Appearance without authority.—A showing that the affiant, an attorney, appeared without authority of the defendant, by request of the defendant's attorney, who had two months before enlisted and was in service in the army in Virginia, and that his absence was unknown to defendant, who was misinformed as to the date court convened, and who had had no opportunity of engaging counsel, is sufficient. Graves v. Rayle, 19 Ind. 83.

49. Under Ill. Laws (1872), p. 345, § 46, providing that where a party applying for a continuance files an affidavit that his attorney is in actual attendance upon the sessions of the general assembly, as a member thereof, and that the presence of such attorney in court is necessary to a fair and proper trial of such suit, it was held that the word "may," in the quoted clause, should be construed to mean "shall," and that the court has no discretion in such a case to refuse a continuance. Chicago Public Stock Exch. v. McClaghry, 148 Ill. 372, 36 N. E. 88; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Teters, 68 Ill. 144. See also Ill. Rev. Stat. (1893), c. 110, § 47; Ware v. Jerseyville, 158 Ill. 234, 41 N. E. 736; Duncan v. Niles, 32 Ill. 541.

50. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Teters, 68 Ill. 144; Williams v. Baker, 67 Ill. 238; McClory v. Crawley, 59 Ill. App. 392.

has been held that it should appear that he had been actually employed prior to the commencement of the session on which he is in attendance.⁵¹

5. ABSENCE BECAUSE OF ATTENDANCE ON ANOTHER COURT. Ordinarily the fact that an attorney is professionally engaged elsewhere in the trial of a cause does not give an absolute right of continuance.⁵² The courtesy existing between members of the bar, and recognized by trial courts, will usually in such cases enable counsel to postpone a cause for a few days in one of the courts so as to enable him to be present at both trials. But this is purely a matter of grace and not of law. The rights of litigants in one court are not to be determined by the condition of the docket in another, nor because an opposing counsel has assumed duties in different courts which may conflict.⁵³ Cases may of course arise when the denial of the right of continuance might amount to an abuse of discretion;⁵⁴ but under such circumstances it is not sufficient to show that the absent attorney was expecting a case to be called in another court, but it must be shown that he is at the time actually engaged in the trial of the other cause.⁵⁵

6. ABSENCE BY AGREEMENT OR STIPULATION. The court is not bound to conform to the private agreements of counsel postponing or delaying the trial of causes contrary to the regular routine of business;⁵⁶ but where such agreements are

51. Chicago Public Stock Exch. v. McClaughry, 148 Ill. 372, 36 N. E. 88 [affirming Stockley v. Goodwin, 78 Ill. 127]. An affidavit is insufficient which alleges that defendant's attorney is a member of a legislature which is to be in session at a subsequent date. Joiner v. Drainage Com'rs, 17 Ill. App. 607.

Failure to allege that the attorney is attending the legislature renders the affidavit insufficient. Mackin v. Cody, 68 Ill. App. 108.

52. California.—Haight v. Green, 19 Cal. 113.

Georgia.—Cotton States L. Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 74 Ga. 220; Sharman v. Morton, 31 Ga. 34.

Illinois.—Northwestern Benev., etc., Assoc. v. Primm, 124 Ill. 100, 16 N. E. 98 [affirming 19 Ill. App. 224]; Culver v. Colehour, 115 Ill. 558, 5 N. E. 89; Packer v. Wetherell, 44 Ill. App. 95.

Louisiana.—Soey v. Soey, 13 La. 424; Brown v. Faulk, 12 La. 598; Ingraham v. White, 2 La. 294.

Minnesota.—Adamek v. Plano Mfg. Co., 64 Minn. 304, 66 N. W. 981.

United States.—Palmer v. U. S., 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,696, 1 Hoffm. Land Cas. 227.

Counsel who have engaged to perform services for a client to prosecute or defend his suit must not assume new duties and relations inconsistent with the duty growing out of such engagement, and should he do so the client must get new counsel or do without him; his absence in attendance upon his new duties will not work a continuance of the cause. Sharman v. Morton, 31 Ga. 34.

Reason of rule.—If it were admitted that the fact of the counsel employed and previously attending to the case voluntarily absents himself from court, for the reason that important professional business required his attention in another court, would be sufficient ground for obtaining the continuance of a cause, it would often be resorted to, greatly to the hindrance and delay of suits and to the prejudice of the rights of the adverse party. Hagerty v. Scott, 10 Tex. 525.

53. Northwestern Benev., etc., Assoc. v. Prim, 19 Ill. App. 224.

54. In Watkins v. Ahrens, etc., Mfg. Co., 38 S. W. 868, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 926, it was held error to deny a continuance and then nonsuit because of failure to prosecute the trial, where the judgment operated as a final determination because of limitations, and plaintiff's failure occurred solely because one of her counsel was engaged in a trial previously begun, and the other was obliged to attend an important cause in the federal court.

Adjournment of regular term.—That the attorney of a party to the suit is engaged in arguing an important cause in another court—the conflict in the hearing being caused by an adjournment of the regular term—has been held good ground for a continuance. Hill v. Clark, 51 Ga. 122.

Rule of court.—Under district court rule, 83, the absence of counsel attending a professional engagement in the court of another county is cause for continuance. Fritz v. Church, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 236, 15 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 341.

55. Gerlach v. Engelhoffer, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 241. See also Rossett v. Gardner, 3 W. Va. 531. In Culver v. Colehour, 115 Ill. 558, 5 N. E. 89, it was held no error to proceed with a case, in the absence of counsel, who was awaiting a motion in another court, the case having been already postponed from the previous day to suit his convenience and notice having been given him that, unless it could be shown the court that he was actually engaged, the case would be proceeded with.

56. Ford v. Holmes, 61 Ga. 419; Moulder v. Kempff, 115 Ind. 459, 17 N. E. 906.

Absence of leading counsel.—A refusal to postpone a trial will not be disturbed where it appears that the leading attorneys had agreed to postpone, the court not having consented, and that the appellant's leading at-

made in open court and with the court's consent and approval, the absence of one of the contracting parties upon the day originally set constitutes a sufficient ground for continuing the case as stipulated.⁵⁷

7. ABSENCE BY LEAVE OF COURT. The granting of leave of absence from court to counsel, unless for providential cause, is of doubtful propriety, when it affects the rights and interests of other parties, and should be exercised at all times with caution;⁵⁸ but where such leave has once been granted no trial should be had while the term of leave remains unexpired.⁵⁹

8. WITHDRAWAL FROM CAUSE. It will never be permitted to a party or his attorney to obtain a continuance of a cause beyond the time allowed him by law, by striking out the attorney's appearance at the term at which the cause stands for trial; otherwise by collusion between attorney and client the trial of a cause might be delayed beyond limit.⁶⁰

9. ABSENCE OF ONE OF SEVERAL COUNSEL. As a general rule the absence of associate counsel is no ground for a continuance of the cause,⁶¹ especially where there is no showing of diligence to acquaint the remaining counsel with the facts of the case,⁶² or that the attorney who is present is not capable of properly conducting the defense.⁶³ Cases may arise, however, where on account of the number torney was therefore absent, but appellant was represented by other counsel, who made as good a defense as could have been made with further time. Moulder v. Kempff, 115 Ind. 459, 17 N. E. 906. And see infra, IV, P. 9.

Adjournment from open court to chambers.—If counsel is absent without leave, the court may hear and dispose of a motion, although advised of an agreement entered into between the absent counsel and the attorney of the opposite party for postponing the hearing until some time in vacation. The court is not bound to conform to private arrangements of counsel contemplating not a continuance from one term to another, but from open court to chambers. Ford v. Holmes, 61 Ga. 419.

Counsel in public service.—The absence of one of the counsel in the legislature is no ground for a continuance. Sharman v. Morton, 31 Ga. 34. And see supra, IV, P. 4.

Counsel summoned as witness.—A refusal to grant a continuance for the absence of one of two counsel appearing for a complainant because summoned as a witness in another cause was proper. U. S. Bank v. Carroll, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 40.

62. Harloe v. Lambie, 132 Cal. 133, 64 Pac. 88; Belck v. Belck, 97 Ind. 73.

Absence anticipated.—The fact that the senior counsel who has prepared and studied the case and has the papers absents himself from court to attend to important business before another tribunal is not a ground for a continuance, where such absence was anticipated by the party employing him for several weeks before the session of the court. Hagerty v. Scott, 10 Tex. 525; Davis v. Zumwalt, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 596.

Assistance in former trial.—The absence of counsel is not ground for continuance, where other counsel, in conjunction with the absent counsel, conducted a former trial of the case, and no prejudice is shown to have resulted from the absence of such counsel. Stringam v. Parker, 159 Ill. 304, 42 N. E. 794 [affirming 56 Ill. App. 361]. And see McCready v. Lindenborn, 165 N. Y. 630, 59 and difficulty of the issues, the absence of leading counsel will be a sufficient ground for granting a continuance.⁶⁴

Q. Death of Parties — 1. DEATH OF PLAINTIFF. The death of plaintiff is such a providential cause as will authorize a continuance, where there is no representative of the estate of such deceased party;⁶⁵ but the defendant is not entitled to a continuance as of course on the death of the plaintiff, where the cause is at issue.⁶⁶ The death of a party for whose use a suit is brought in the name of another seems not to be a reason for continuance at the instance of such party's representative; but if the defendant object to going to trial because there is no responsible party on the record, the court may in its discretion continue the cause till such party is introduced.⁶⁷

2. DEATH OF DEFENDANT. After the death of the defendant in an action the plaintiff is entitled to a continuance in order to file his bill of revivor against the representatives of the deceased.⁶⁸

R. Death of Counsel. The death of counsel pending the trial of a cause is a good ground of continuance;⁶⁹ and especially is this the case where the party has been diligent in trying to employ other counsel, but is unprepared for trial through no fault of his own.⁷⁰ Refusal of continuance on account of the death of defendant's chief attorney was proper, where the cause had several times been continued at defendant's instance, and the illness of the attorney was such that his presence at the trial could not be expected.⁷¹ It is not error to refuse a postponement asked for on the ground that new counsel, who have recently been employed in consequence of the death of the original counsel, have not yet been able to obtain papers which were placed in his keeping, and are important for use on the trial, where such papers are not competent as evidence, but can only be used as memoranda for the information and aid of counsel.⁷²

S. Absence of Witnesses or Evidence — 1. IN GENERAL. The absence of witnesses or evidence is the most usual ground upon which a motion for a con-

N. E. 1125 [affirming 37 N. Y. App. Div. 425, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 54], holding that refusal to adjourn over a day for illness of counsel was not error, where such counsel had competent assistance and his client was not prejudiced thereby.

64. Cooper v. Jones, 24 Ga. 473; Rice v. Melendy, 36 Iowa 166. And see Moulder v. Kempff, 115 Ind. 459, 17 N. E. 906, holding that the absence of the principal counsel in a cause may justify its postponement or continuance, dependent upon the circumstances attending his absence and his peculiar relation to the cause, but a judgment will not be reversed because a postponement or a continuance was refused on account of the absence at the trial of the principal attorney or only attorney in the cause, unless it be made to appear that some real injustice was probably done by the refusal.

Absent by leave.—Cases in which the leading counsel are absent with leave cannot be tried in their absence, unless by consent of the party employing them or by consent of other counsel of such party, but must be continued. Summerlin v. Dent, 36 Ga. 54.

65. Worthy v. Tate, 42 Ga. 392.

66. Wilson v. Codman, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 193, 2 L. ed. 408; Alexander v. Patten, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 171, 1 Cranch C. C. 338.

Death of resident member of firm.—Where the only resident member of plaintiff firm dies pending the suit, the cause will be continued to give defendants an opportunity to lay the rule for security for costs and give the sixty days' notice required. Lambert v. Smith, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,027, 1 Cranch C. C. 347.

Upon the death of the plaintiff and appearance of his executor, the defendant is not entitled to a continuance. But he may insist on the production of the letters testamentary before the executor shall be permitted to prosecute. Wilson v. Codman, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 193, 2 L. ed. 408.

67. Christine v. Whitehill, 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 98.

69. Hunter v. Fairfax, 3 Dall. (Pa.) 305, 1 L. ed. 613.

70. Richardson v. Nolan, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 103.

Issuance of commission.—Where plaintiff directs a commission to issue as soon as the answer is filed, and his attorney soon after falls sick and dies, and he employs other counsel and forwards the commission, a continuance will be granted four months after issue joined. Richardson v. Nolan, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 103.

71. Geiger v. Payne, 102 Iowa 581, 69 N. W. 554, 71 N. W. 571.

72. Williams v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 9 W. Va. 33.

tinuance is based, and whether or not a continuance shall be allowed on this ground is very largely in the discretion of the court,⁷³ which must take into consideration not only the nature and character of the evidence desired, but also the diligence that has been previously used in its attempted procurement.⁷⁴

2. ILLNESS OF WITNESS. Where a continuance is sought on the ground of the illness of a witness, the illness must as a general rule be of such a nature as will preclude his appearance at the trial;⁷⁵ and it seems to be the better practice in such cases to accompany the application with a certificate of a physician to that effect.⁷⁶ Where an illness sufficient to prevent attendance is shown it is not necessary to show further that the witness had been subpoenaed or tendered his fees.⁷⁷ And if the witness is a material one, a refusal to grant a continuance is reversible error, where it is shown that he cannot attend without danger to his health or life.⁷⁸

3. IMPOSSIBILITY OF ATTENDANCE BECAUSE OF BAD WEATHER. A continuance should be granted when the weather and roads are so bad as to make it impossible for witnesses to attend.⁷⁹

4. NECESSITY OF EVIDENCE. A party seeking a continuance on the ground of the absence of a particular witness or set of witnesses must show that they are essential to a fair trial of the cause, and that he cannot safely go to trial without them;⁸⁰

Non-resident witness.—Where there has been no laches in failing to take the deposition of a witness absent in another state, she being sick and unable to testify, and it is shown that her testimony is expected to be procured by the next term, a continuance should be allowed for that purpose. Crittenden v. Coleman, 74 Ga. 803.

Short spells of illness.—A case will not be continued on the ground of the sickness of an absent witness shown to have spells of sickness lasting a short time, but to have attended court for the three previous terms, and to have been well and in town the week previous to the motion. Peters v. West, 70 Ga. 343.

In Illinois it has been held that if a continuance is asked on the ground of the sickness of a witness, that fact must be shown by affidavit and not by the mere certificate of his physician. Schnell v. Rothbath, 71 Ill. 83; Waarich v. Winter, 33 Ill. App. 36.

Letter of stranger.—Where a motion for a continuance on the ground that one of the defendants was absent by reason of sickness was denied, the only showing being by a letter of a stranger, it was held there was no error in overruling the motion. McReynolds v. McReynolds, 74 Iowa 89, 36 N. W. 903.

Subpoena day before trial.—Where a continuance asked because of the absence of a material witness who had been duly subpoenaed and whose absence was caused solely by his sickness was refused, because the witness had not been subpoenaed and his fees tendered him until the day prior to that on which the cause was set for trial, it was held error. Motion for alimony.—When there was a motion for alimony, pending a bill for divorce, and the defendant in the motion moved to continue, showing that a material witness who lived in the county and had been subpoenaed, etc., was absent without his consent, it was held error in the court to refuse the continuance, on the ground that the granting of alimony was wholly in the discretion of the court, and that there was no necessity for the presence of all the witnesses. Wardlaw v. Wardlaw, 39 Ga. 53.

Time to take depositions.—A continuance and upon the strength of the case thus presented, the court will usually exercise its own discretion as to granting or denying the relief desired.⁸¹

5. COMPETENCY OF EVIDENCE. No continuance will be granted where the evidence of the witness if present would be incompetent,⁸² or where the witness if produced would be incompetent to testify because of some disability which it is admitted no effort would be made to remove.⁸³

6. MATERIALITY OF EVIDENCE — a. In General. Where a continuance is sought on the ground of absent witnesses, the facts to be proved by them must be material to the issues involved in the cause;⁸⁴ and where they are not material the continuance should be refused.⁸⁵

will not be granted to allow the party applying for it to take a deposition, if the testimony, when obtained, would constitute no defense to the action. Hawley v. Stirling, 2 Cal. 470.

Witness desired as expert.—It is not an abuse of discretion to deny an adjournment of a cause on the ground of the absence of a foreign witness, who knows nothing of the facts of the case, but is desired as an expert. Ten Broeck v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 6 N. Y. St. 100.

Copy offered in evidence.—The absence of a defendant to whom had been given an original instrument, a copy of which is offered by plaintiff after notice to produce the original, will not entitle his co-defendants to a continuance, when he if present could not be examined as a witness. Hills v. Jacobs, 7 Rob. (La.) 406.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 69.

Action on promissory note — False date.—In an action on a promissory note, where issue was made by one defendant as surety, by a verified denial of its execution, he asked a continuance of the case because of the absence of a witness by whom he could prove that after he had signed the note, while it was in the possession of his co-defendant, the principal, the latter, in the absence of affiant, but in the presence of the payee, caused a false date prior to the true one to be inserted in a blank left for a date, and then delivered the same to the payee. It was held that the facts were material and a continuance should have been granted. Emmons v. Meeker, 55 Ind. 321.

Statement of party to action.—Where the only evidence that the witness was material was the statement of the defendant himself, under advice of counsel, the application was denied. McNaughton v. Evert, 116 Mich. 141, 74 N. W. 486.

85. California.—Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 641.

b. Issues Made by Pleadings. Not only must the absent evidence be material as to the issues of fact involved, but in order to warrant a continuance, the evidence must be material to the issues as made by the pleadings.⁸⁶ Thus a continuance will not be granted to obtain evidence upon an issue that has been defectively pleaded⁸⁷ or which has never been pleaded at all,⁸⁸ or on a point rendered immaterial by the applicant's own pleading.⁸⁹ Where the defendant has set up a defense to the action which the absent evidence may even remotely affect, he is entitled to a continuance and a hearing on the testimony desired,⁹⁰ but where he

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 69. Action for injury—Negligence of third person.—In an action for injury alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, it is not an abuse of judicial discretion to refuse a continuance asked for on the ground of the absence of witnesses, whose testimony would merely show that the injury was caused by the negligence of third persons as well as by that of defendant. Pacific Express Co. v. Lasker Real-Estate Assoc., 81 Tex. 81, 16 S. W. 792.

Chancery practice.—A continuance will not be allowed in chancery to procure witnesses on an issue that has already been tried by a jury, by the applicant's consent, and found against him. Marble v. Bonhotel, 35 Ill. 240.

Evidence of immateriality.—The fact that the witness for whose absence the continuance was asked came into court during the progress of the trial and was not examined conclusively shows that his evidence was not material. Keyes v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 50 Tex. 169.

Frivolous interrogatories.—A court, exercising its discretion, may refuse an application to continue a cause in order to obtain answers to interrogatories, where the interrogatories are frivolous and intended only for delay. Moncheux v. Mistrot, 22 La. Ann. 421.

Signature to deed.—The fact that a witness was absent who could prove the signature to a deed, but not the delivery, and who has not been summoned, is no cause for a continuance, since such testimony is neither relevant nor important. Chambers v. Handley, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 98.

Pleading held bad on demurrer.—It is not error to refuse a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness who will testify to facts alleged in a pleading which has properly been held bad on demurrer. Prather v. Young, 67 Ind. 480. And so after a demurrer to a pleading has been sustained it is no error to overrule a motion for a continuance to obtain answers for interrogatories framed to elicit evidence to support the pleading demurred to. Swift v. Ellsworth, 10 Ind. 205, 71 Am. Dec. 316.

88. McCreary v. Newberry, 25 Ill. 496; Moore v. Hawkins, 6 Dana (Ky.) 289; Anderson v. Birdsall, 19 La. 441; Waldo v. Beckwith, 1 N. M. 182.

Insufficient assets.—In a summary motion against administrators for money paid by the plaintiff for their intestate, they moved for continuance on the ground that they had qualified only some seven or eight months previous, and so had not had time to settle their accounts of administration; and that they desired to show a want of assets in their defense, without, however, offering any plea or affidavit that the assets were insufficient, it was held that this was no sufficient ground for a continuance. Clements v. Powell, 9 Leigh (Va.) 1.

Payment.—When the answer in an action for goods sold and delivered consisted wholly of a denial of their sale and delivery, defendant will not be given a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses by whom he expects to prove payment, because payment, not having been pleaded, is not admissible in evidence. Clark v. Mullen, 16 Nebr. 431, 20 N. W. 642.

89. Ballston Spa Bank v. Milwaukee Mar. Bank, 16 Wis. 120.

90. Lyon v. Stevens, 35 Tex. 439.

General bad character—Slander.—Since the defendant in an action of slander may prove under the general issue the general bad character of the plaintiff in mitigation of damages, the defendant's affidavit for a continuance in such case, on account of the absence of witnesses by whom that fact can be proved, cannot be objected to on the ground that the witnesses are not material. Woods v. Anderson, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 598.

Inquest for damages.—A defaulted defend-sets up no valid defense,⁹¹ or one deemed insufficient in law, his motion should be denied.⁹²

7. EVIDENCE THAT COULD NOT ALTER RESULT. Evidence that plainly cannot alter the result of the action is clearly no ground for a motion to continue a cause.⁹³ And where testimony is important only in connection with certain facts, those facts should be set forth or referred to so that the materiality of the evidence may be apparent to the court.⁹⁴

8. CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE. It is largely discretionary with the court whether or not it shall permit a continuance for the purpose of obtaining cumulative evidence;⁹⁵ and an application for a continuance based on this ground is properly refused, where the fact which the witness is expected to prove is established without contradiction by other evidence,⁹⁶ where there has been considerable lack of diligence in procuring the testimony of the witness,⁹⁷ or where there is no probability that the evidence would change the result;⁹⁸ but it has been held erroneous to refuse a continuance on the ground that the testimony of the witness was cumulative in part.⁹⁹ So if the only witness present to testify to a point is a party in interest, and the other party contradicts him, it is proper to grant a continuance to bring in disinterested testimony to settle the dispute.¹

9. IMPEACHING TESTIMONY. A party cannot by introducing adverse testimony show himself entitled to a continuance for the purpose of procuring a witness to impeach that very testimony.² So an application for a continuance is rightly ant is entitled to produce witnesses on the inquest to show the correct amount due on the note sued on, but not to make out any substantive defense to the right of action, notwithstanding the cause is properly noticed for inquest under the rule and no affidavit of merits is filed, and is therefore entitled to move for a continuance for the absence of witnesses, and the court is bound to entertain and consider his motion. People v. Ionia Cir. Judge, 32 Mich. 61.

Under a Texas statute providing that "no application for a continuance shall be heard before the defendant files his defense," it was held that although a general denial is an answer, it can only be said to be a "defense" so far as to put the plaintiff upon proof of his case, and that the continuance might properly be denied. *Fowler v. It is no reason for the continuance of an action on a note made payable at a particular place that the party asking for it can prove by the absent witness that he had funds for its payment at the place specified four days after the maturity of the note. McCreary v. Newberry, 25 Ill. 496.

Partnership debt.—An application for continuance by a defendant to procure evidence of a debt owing defendant by a partnership of which plaintiff is a member is properly denied, as a debt against a partnership cannot be set off against a claim belonging to one of the members thereof. *Hilliard v. overruled where the testimony on account of which the continuance was desired was of a negative character and intended merely to contradict a witness who had been examined in chief by the opposite party, but on a matter that had been elicited from him on cross-examination by the party seeking the continuance.³ And so the refusal to allow the withdrawal of a juror and a continuance to enable defendant to procure evidence to impeach a map which had been introduced in evidence, the existence of which is a surprise to him, is not error where the court allowed him a reasonable time after verdict for plaintiff to procure such evidence.⁴

10. EXISTENCE OF DEPOSITIONS OF ABSENT WITNESS. A continuance will not be granted on account of the absence of witnesses whose depositions have already been taken,⁵ or where depositions already on file contain all the evidence needed to establish the issue involved.⁶

11. PRESENCE OF WITNESS BEFORE CONCLUSION OF TRIAL. Where witnesses appear and testify before the trial is concluded, it is not error to refuse a continuance on the ground of their absence before the trial.⁷

12. DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE. The absence of documentary evidence is not as a general rule a good ground for continuance, as the same can be produced by process of court by the exercise of due diligence.⁸ So also a continuance should be refused where the documents demanded form no necessary part of the evidence,⁹ or where from aught that appears the continuance would be unavailing.¹⁰ The court, however, should take into consideration the justice or injustice that may result from a refusal of the motion, and where the applicant has been guilty of no negligence it is no abuse of discretion to allow him time for the production of the document in question.¹¹

13. DILIGENCE IN PROCURING EVIDENCE — a. In General. The courts have been uniform in requiring the parties who ask a continuance on the ground of absence of witnesses or evidence to show due diligence to procure the attendance of such

Copies of record.—The absence of the clerk of a public officer, with the key of a safe containing documents to be produced by the officer at the trial, is no ground for a continuance. In such case more of an effort should have been made, such as obtaining copies. Slidell v. Locke, 18 La. 461.

Papers in possession of jury.—That papers which a party wished to use are in the possession of a jury who had retired to consider their verdict is no ground for a continuance, as, being in the power of the court, the court would direct them to be brought in rather than to continue the cause. *Hall v. 450; Cahill v. Dawson, 1 F. & F. 291. In Campbell v. McCaskill, 88 Mo. App. 44, it was held that where an application for continuance in replevin discloses that plaintiff's title is evidenced by a mortgage, the original of which was necessary in a pending litigation in another state, and that a copy of the mortgage was received in time to be used, but was defectively certified by the custodian of the records, the refusal of the continuance was an unwise exercise of judicial discretion, as the production of the copy showed plaintiffs were diligent in endeavoring to secure the mortgage as evidence. Campbell v. McCaskill, 88 Mo. App. 44.

Certified copies of city records.—The fact that the court adjourned to allow a party to obtain certified copies of city records essential to his defense is not an abuse of discretion. Young v. Patton, 9 Oreg. 195.

Fraudulent suppression of evidence.—Where plaintiff fraudulently makes way with evidence of defendant's rights material to the action his proceedings must be stayed until he shall produce it. Premo v. Smith, 32 N. Y. Super. Ct. 467, 40 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 480.

Land certificates filed for registry.—Where in an action of trespass to try title the plaintiff moved for a continuance on the ground that his title consisted of certain land certificates and surveys which he had filed for registry and approval, and which had been suspended but would be finally approved, and that due diligence had been used, it was held that the continuance should have been granted. *Peck v. 13. Allen v. Brown, 72 Minn. 459, 75 N. W. 385.

Due diligence illustrated.—In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries caused by the derailment while crossing a bridge of the car in which plaintiff was riding, plaintiff relied on defendant's running at too great a rate of speed, and in not having left openings in the bridge and the approaches thereto to permit the ice and water to pass through in times of high water. It did not appear upon which ground the jury based their verdict for plaintiff. At the trial defendant filed an affidavit for continuance for absence of a material witness, showing reasonable diligence in trying to procure his attendance, and that his absence was due to a fact which did not come to the knowledge of defendant's officer until it was too late to procure his attendance. It showed that the absent witness was an experienced engineer who had recently made careful measurements and surveys of the place of the accident for the purpose of showing the sufficiency of the bridge, its approaches, and the openings thereto; under the circumstances it was held, it not appearing that the judge doubted that the witness would testify, as it was alleged that he was expected to, that due diligence was used or that the affidavit was made in good faith, the refusal to grant a continuance was ground for reversal. Gonring v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 78 Wis. 16, 47 N. W. 18.

Absence of diligence illustrated.—An order refusing a postponement of trial for absence of a witness will not be disturbed on appeal, where it appears that the moving party had for several days previous to the motion answered ready on the call of the day calendar, although knowing of the witness' absence. *Walbridge v. Illustrations of rule.—Where the issues were made up in February, 1868, and application for continuance in June, 1869, and the defendant made no effort to obtain the testimony of absent witnesses until some three months before the sitting of the court, it was held that there was no sufficient diligence shown. Cody v. Butterfield, 1 Colo. 377. So where a cause was at issue at the June term, 1859, and continued at the February and June terms, 1860, and no effort was made witness and the court¹⁵ and care, or the absence of it, in making search or inquiry for the witness.¹⁶ It is the duty of a party to ascertain before trial, not only the residence and place of address of all witnesses material to his cause;¹⁷ but he

by defendant to procure the attendance of his witnesses until near the October term, 1860, it was held not error in the court below to refuse a continuance. Bewley v. Cummings, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 232. And where, prior to the eighth term, no attempt had been made to secure the attendance or testimony of a witness, it was held no ground for continuance that he was then ascertained to be in another state. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 677. On the other hand sufficient diligence is shown where it appears that a subpoena was issued for the witness as soon as practicable after learning of his testimony. Reid v. Farmers', etc., Tobacco Warehouse, 44 S. W. 124, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1939. So where defendant who on the day following the filing of the answer issued a subpoena for a witness residing within four blocks of the court-house, which was returned "Not served" (witness having been in town), has exercised proper diligence; and at the trial five days thereafter it was held error to refuse a continuance for absence of said witness. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 380, 45 S. W. 819.

In Pennsylvania rule 90 obviously was framed to meet the case of a witness who resides in, and who is actually within, the county within five days of the day of trial, but who is absent from it on that day. It prescribes a rule of diligence as to the search for those witnesses, i. e., the search must commence, subpoena in hand, at least five days before the trial, in order to make out a right to a continuance on the ground of their absence on that day. It has no application to the case of a witness who is within the county on the day of trial. If due diligence has not been used to subpoena him the case must go on without him; if, notwithstanding such diligence, there has been a failure to reach him, the court will hold the case till further efforts can be made. The rule does not apply to a witness confined to his residence by sickness, because it expressly declares that there shall be no continuance if he can be found at his residence. If the rule applied to such witness, it would be necessary not only to take out and serve a subpoena upon him, but to take it out at least five days before the day for the trial. Smith v. Cunningham, 9 Phila. 96, 30 Leg. Int. 12.

15. Where a considerable time had elapsed between service of process and the trial term, and it appeared that the witnesses in question lived a five-hours' ride from the court town, and that defendant knew it and had taken no measures to secure their attendance, it was held that due diligence was not shown, and the continuance was rightly refused. Kirland v. Kline, 16 Ind. 313.

Where a witness who lived eight miles from the place of trial, was subpoenaed and failed to appear, but defendant did not know of his absence until the witness was called to take the stand, at four-thirty P. M., when a motion was made to continue the case until eighty-thirty A. M. of the following day, it was held that it was not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to grant the continuance, although such a motion might appeal to the sympathy of the court. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. O'Melia, 1 Kan. App. 374, 41 Pac. 437.

Judicial notice of distance.—On application for a continuance, the court will notice the distance between the place of trial and the place whence the evidence is to be obtained. Park v. Larkin, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 17.

16. Watson v. Blymer Mfg. Co., 66 Tex. 558, 2 S. W. 353.

Inquiry and search.—To show that proper effort has been made to secure the attendance of a material witness, not appearing to be beyond the jurisdiction of the court, a subpoena should be taken out, and a diligent and honest inquiry and search made to find him and to serve the same a reasonable time before trial (McMillan v. Larned, 41 Mich. 521, 2 N. W. 662); so where it appeared that the witness was a telegraph operator and transient man, that he left the county shortly after the suit was brought, that the materiality of his evidence was known at the time of filing the pleadings, and that if inquiries had been directed to the proper quarter his movements could have been traced and his location discovered in less than the two years during which the suit had been pending a continuance was denied. Watson v. Blymer Mfg. Co., 66 Tex. 558, 2 S. W. 353.

In town on day of trial.—A continuance will not be granted for absence of a witness where it appears that on the day the evidence on the trial was closed he was in the town, and had been there two days before, when a subpoena was issued for him. George v. Swafford, 75 Iowa 491, 39 N. W. 804.

Declaration filed on last day.—Where suit was begun in September, and the declaration was not filed until May 12 following—on the last day allowed by law—it was error not to allow defendant a continuance at that May term, on showing that material witnesses residing at a distance could not be obtained in time for the trial. Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Marseilles Mfg. Co., 6 Ill. 236.

17. California.—Tompkins v. Montgomery, 123 Cal. 219, 55 Pac. 997.

Illinois.—Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ingersoll, 65 Ill. 399; Ward v. Yancey, 78 Ill. App. 368.

Iowa.—Brady v. Malone, 4 Iowa 146.

Louisiana.—In Cobb v. Franks, 6 La. Ann. 769, it was held that where a party gave his counsel the address of a witness in the city, thereby leading him to suppose that the witness could ordinarily be found there, while in reality he was engaged in the up-river trade, and only in the city at long and interrupted intervals, such party would be considered as guilty of laches and not entitled to a con-must also ascertain all material facts within the knowledge of each witness, and a failure to do so is a want of diligence sufficient to defeat his application for a continuance on the ground of absence of witnesses.¹⁸

b. Witness in Employ of Applicant. In case the absent witness is in the employ of the party applying, there exists less excuse for his non-appearance at the trial, and a continuance on the ground of absence of such witness will usually be denied.¹⁹

c. Officers of Court Required as Witnesses. The fact that a desired witness is an officer of the court does not excuse the want of ordinary diligence in procuring his attendance.²⁰ In such case the same diligence is required in endeavoring to procure attendance as is required in the case of any other witness.²¹

d. Party Required as Witness. A stronger case for a continuance on account of the absence of a witness must be made, if that witness is a party to the action than would be required were he a third person,²² unless the case presents some tinuance on the ground of the witness' absence.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 77 et seq.

Showing as to diligence.—Where a party asks for the continuance of a cause on the ground of the absence of a witness whose residence he does not know, he should show either that he has not had time to ascertain the residence of the witness or that he has used proper diligence to ascertain his residence. James v. Arbuckle, 8 Iowa 272.

18. Wynn v. Ely, 8 Fla. 232; Chaney v. Carrigan, 53 Ga. 84; Blair v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 89 Mo. 383, 1 S. W. 350. Where the defendant knew or had reason to believe long before the trial that certain persons possessed information which might be useful to it at the trial and neglected to procure their testimony, it is not error for the court to refuse a continuance of the cause based upon the ground that the defendant had just become aware, from reading the depositions of such persons offered by the plaintiff, but afterward withdrawn, that they are material witnesses in its behalf. Congar v. Galena, etc., R. Co., 17 Wis. 477.

England.—Wright v. McGuffie, 4 C. B. N. S. 441, 93 E. C. L. 441.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 78. No service of legal process.—Where defendant is in the habit of securing the presence of its employees as witnesses without legal process, and the cause comes to trial after a year's pendency, and several of its witnesses are not present, defendant cannot complain of the refusal of the court to grant a continuance. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Wrape, 4 Ind. App. 108, 30 N. E. 427.

Non-resident witness.—Where the absent witness is a non-resident of the state, and is in the employ of the party applying, it is no error to refuse to continue beyond a time sufficient to allow the witness to reach the court. Philadelphia F. Assoc. v. Hogwood, 82 Va. 342, 4 S. E. 617. In Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Gage, 63 Tex. 568, the defendant sought a continuance for the absence of the testimony of one of its agents. In the application for continuance it was stated that a few days after service on the local agent, and before the principal officers of the company knew of such service, the agent whose testimony was desired went to California on important business for the company, where he was detained for several weeks, and on his return went immediately to Mexico, where he still was, and that there was no time before his departure for California, nor after his return and before his leaving for Mexico, to take his deposition, and that no diligence would have procured his evidence. It was held that the witness being in the employ of the party seeking a continuance, and it electing to keep him otherwise employed than in answering depositions, his employer could not delay a case for the absence of his testimony, and the application for continuance was properly overruled.

20. Adair v. Cooper, 25 Tex. 548, as for instance a sheriff.

Attorney.—The mere fact that a witness is an attorney does not of itself justify a relaxation of the diligence required in the procuring attendance of a witness. Parker v. Leman, 10 Tex. 116. But if an attorney regularly attended the court and promised to attend as a witness, failure to subpoena him it has been held would not be ground for refusing a continuance because of his absence. Hensley v. Lytle, 5 Tex. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 741. And see White v. Lynch, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 183, 1 L. ed. 341.

21. Walker v. Floyd, 30 Ga. 237.

22. Quincy Whig Co. v. Tillson, 67 Ill. 351; Mantonya v. Huerter, 35 Ill. App. 27:

peculiar feature from which some material injustice to the party's rights would result in case of trial without postponement.²³ It is the duty of a party to be present at the trial of his own cause, and his absence will as a general rule be considered as his own peril.²⁴ Especially is it proper to refuse a request for a continuance where it is not known where the party is²⁵ or the cause of his absence,²⁶ where the evidence proposed to be given could not affect the result of the trial,²⁷ or where he has been guilty of gross negligence.²⁸

e. Reliance Upon Promise to Attend. A party has no legal right to rely upon the promise of a witness to attend the trial, without subpoenaing him in advance, and if he acts upon such promise he does so at his own peril and cannot claim a continuance if the witness disappoints him when the cause is called for trial.²⁹

Schlesinger v. Nunan, 26 Ill. App. 525; Gates v. Hamilton, 12 Iowa 50; Winslow v. Bradley, 15 Wis. 394. See also Jacobs v. Finkle, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 432; Logie v. Black, 24 W. Va. 1. "The fact that the absent witness, if material, who has been duly summoned to appear at the trial, is a party plaintiff or defendant in the suit, cannot prejudicially affect the motion for continuance, unless the court has good grounds to doubt the fairness of the motives of the party moving for the continuance, and to suspect that the object of the motion is mere delay. And in such event, the court may enquire further into the materiality of the witness, require the party to state what he expects to prove by the absent witness, and even send an officer with a rule, or an attachment, if a rule has previously been served, for the absent witness, whether he be a party, who has been summoned as a witness, or any other witness." Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 676 [quoted in Carter v. Wharton, 82 Va. 264, 267].

"An application to postpone a trial on account of the absence of a party, stands upon somewhat different grounds from an application to postpone it because of the absence of a disinterested witness. In the latter case a party may use all diligence to have his witness present at the trial, yet fail on account of some neglect of the witness himself. In his own case he can control his own actions, and if not able to be present at the trial can take steps to have his deposition taken." Winslow v. Bradley, 15 Wis. 394, 396.

Surgical operation.—It is error to refuse a motion to postpone a case where the moving affidavit shows without contradiction that the moving party was about to undergo a serious surgical operation, which would prevent her presence at the trial, and that she was the sole witness as to a material issue. Michellen v. Spies, 83 Hun (N. Y.) 509, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 17, 65 N. Y. St. 140.

24. In Schlesinger v. Nunan, 26 Ill. App. 525, 527, the court said: "Where the absent witness is the party himself, very different rules obtain from those which govern cases where the witness is one who is in no way interested in the suit, and whose attendance can be compelled only by the ordinary process of subpoena. A party who is a material witness in his own behalf must have his testimony ready for use at the trial, unless prevented from so doing by some obstacle which by the exercise of reasonable diligence he cannot overcome, and the obstacle should not be one which he has created by his own voluntary act. If he allows considerations of business or pleasure or even regard for his own health to call him away at a time when his suit is liable to be called for trial and he thereby loses the benefit of his own testimony, he must, ordinarily, suffer the consequences."

Short distance from court.—In Richardson v. Dinkgrave, 26 La. Ann. 651, a continuance to allow plaintiff's attorney to send for her, a short distance from the court-house, was held properly refused on the ground that it was the duty of a party intending to be heard in his own behalf to be present at the trial, especially where no subpoena has been issued.

f. Failure to Summon Witness. A continuance on the ground of the absence of a material witness will ordinarily be denied, where it does not appear that the applicant has exercised reasonable diligence to subpoena witnesses and obtain their presence at the trial.⁸⁰ The question is one within the discretion of the trial court.⁸¹ The law has provided parties with the writ of subpoena⁸² and Exceptional case.—In Bentle v. Gerke Brewing Co., 14 Ky. L. Rep. 766, a defendant who was in attendance at court for the purpose of defending the action, after filing his answer, promised his co-defendants, who were relying upon his testimony in support of their separate defense, that he would remain and testify for them, and relying upon that promise they did not have a subpoena issued. When the case was called two days after he filed his answer he was not present, having been frightened away by the threat of plaintiff to prosecute him for perjury in swearing to his answer. Under such circumstances it was held that his co-defendants should have been granted a continuance upon the filing of an affidavit stating these facts and showing the materiality of his testimony.

The mere act of taking out summonses for witnesses, and handing them to the sheriff, is insufficient ground on which to obtain a continuance. Winchester v. Rightor, 12 La. 255.

Upon an application in chancery for a continuance for absence of witnesses, it will not be deemed sufficient diligence that subpoenas were issued for them, unless it appears that their depositions could not have been taken. Marble v. Bonhotel, 35 Ill. 240.

31. Farmer v. Farmer, 72 Ill. 32; Berry v. Burnett, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 558, 56 S. W. 769. A continuance should be granted on account of the absence of a material witness, for whom a subpoena had been issued as soon as practicable after learning of his testimony. Reid v. Farmers', etc., Warehouse, 44 S. W. 124, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1939.

Exceptional case.—Where a witness departs from the state, without the knowledge of the party desiring his testimony, within a few hours after the commencement of suit, the failure to serve him with subpoena cannot be regarded as negligence, so as to prevent a continuance. Hirsch v. Ferris, 1 Colo. 402; Miller v. Hickman, 1 Pennw. (Del.) 263, 40 Atl. 192.

32. Hensley v. Lytle, 5 Tex. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 741.

Subpoena not served.—A motion for a continuance by a defendant on account of the absence of a witness for whom a subpoena had been taken, but not served, for want of proper directions of the defendant, will not be granted. Golding v. The Castro, 20 La. Ann. 458. See also Robert v. Brown, 14 La. Ann. 597.

Defective service.—Under Ind. Civ. Code, § 229, no one can serve a subpoena except the sheriff or his deputy, and where a party has made such service himself he is not entitled to a continuance on account of the absence of the witness. Leary v. Meier, 78 Ind. 393.

Delivery of subpoena.—Where counsel showed that he delivered a written memorandum to the clerk to issue subpoenas to the sheriff for certain material witnesses, and the clerk deposed that his usual custom was to leave papers for the sheriff at a store, where the sheriff called and had requested papers to be left, that he had no particular recollection of this case, but believed the subpoenas to have been left accordingly, it was held that to refuse a continuance on the ground that there was no proof of the receipt of the subpoenas by the sheriff was error (Deford v. Hayes, 6 Munf. (Va.) 390); but a party is not entitled to a continuance on account of the absence of a witness for whom a subpoena was not delivered to the sheriff in compliance with a rule of court requiring a delivery at the latest on the day preceding process of the court to compel attendance;³³ and if the suitor is negligent and inattentive in the use of the means provided by law to compel attendance he cannot expect indulgence at the hands of the court.³⁴ The mere writing of letters, sending telegrams to witnesses to attend, or making inquiries will not be sufficient to entitle him to relief.³⁵

g. Delay in Issuance of Subpœna. It is the duty of a party to serve his witnesses in time to secure their presence at the trial, and where he has failed for the reason that the subpœna was not issued in due time, his application for a continuance will be denied.³⁶ The importance of having a witness subpœnaed a reasonable time before trial is manifest. It should be long enough to enable the witness to arrange his affairs, so that he can attend without personal inconvenience or loss on account of business.³⁷ The time elapsing between the date of issuance or service and the date of trial as affecting the question of due diligence in attempting to procure the attendance of witnesses depends somewhat on the place where the witness is to be found,³⁸ but under ordinary circumstances an interval of from one to four days will not be held an exercise of due diligence.³⁹

Attachment itself no ground for continuance.—In English v. Mullanphy, 1 Mo. 780, 782, the court said: "An attachment in itself is no ground for a continuance. Where it was taken in due season, returnable forthwith, under circumstances which justify the belief that the witness may be brought in during the term, the Circuit Court will, doubtless, either continue the cause, or have it postponed to await the return of the attachment. This must be the meaning of that rule on the subject which provides, that no cause shall await the return of an attachment."

Attachment unavailing.—A continuance will be granted, where a material witness is absent, whose attendance could not be procured by subpœna, where the cause of his inability to attend is such that an attachment for contempt of court would not be issued against him for failing to obey a subpœna; and in such case it is immaterial whether a subpœna has been issued or not. *Allen v. Three days before trial.—Where a party fails to take out a subpœna until three days

h. Failure of Witness to Attend After Summoned. As a general rule a party is entitled to a continuance where a witness has failed to attend after being duly subpoenaed;⁴⁰ but in such case the applicant must have exercised reasonable diligence and have acted in good faith.⁴¹ In some jurisdictions it has been held that in order to entitle the party to a continuance because of the absence of a witness duly summoned it is necessary that an attachment should have been moved for.⁴²

i. Inability to Serve Witness With Process. The mere fact that subpoenas have been placed in the hands of an officer for service and returned not found is no ground for continuance;⁴³ there must be some showing of diligence to entitle the applicant to the relief he seeks.⁴⁴

j. Witness Absenting Himself After Attending Court. The presence of a witness in court at the time of the trial is evidence of a party's diligence in procuring his attendance,⁴⁵ and where such witness absents himself during the trial without the procurement of the party the latter is entitled to a continuance.⁴⁶ before the cause comes on for trial, he is not entitled to a second continuance, although the witness be an attorney of the court. Parker v. Leman, 10 Tex. 116.

40. Waldrup v. Maxwell, 84 Ga. 113, 10 S. E. 597; Fry v. Shehee, 55 Ga. 208. In Pennington v. Scott, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 94, 1 L. ed. 394, a cause marked for trial was postponed where the defendant, as soon as he had notice of trial, took out a subpoena for a witness at a great distance, and neither the witness nor the person employed to serve the subpoena attended.

Production of papers in lieu of attendance.—In Taylor v. Peck, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 11, a defendant in unlawful detainer subpoenaed plaintiff, but promised her she need not attend if she would produce the lease between them at the trial. She was not present at the trial, and her attorneys being asked about the lease admitted having it, but denied its admissibility as evidence. It was held that defendant was entitled to a continuance.

The return of the sheriff must be produced to prove that the witness not appearing was subpoenaed. Gordon v. Spencer, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 286.

41. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Fleetwood, 90 Ga. 23, 15 S. E. 778.

Notification of witnesses.—Under a rule of court requiring every party to notify his witnesses of the day on which his case is set for trial, it was held that a party was not entitled to a continuance as of right for the absence of a material witness, who, although previously subpoenaed, was not notified on what day the case would be tried. Wilson v. Burr, 97 Ga. 256, 22 S. E. 991.

Removal of cause.—Witnesses summoned to appear at a court held in one county are not bound to follow the case to another county to which it has been removed, and if there is not a reasonable time in which to obtain their testimony it is good cause for continuance. Dangerfield v. Paschal, 20 Tex. 536.

42. Hensley v. Lytle, 5 Tex. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 741; Woods v. Young, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,994, 1 Cranch C. C. 346. And see Hamilton v. Moore, 94 Ga. 707, 19 S. E. 993.

Attachment returnable forthwith.—Where a witness subpoenaed failed to appear, and plaintiff immediately sued out an attachment returnable to the next term and moved a continuance, the continuance was properly denied, there appearing no reason why the attachment should not have been returnable forthwith. English v. Mullanphy, 1 Mo. 780.

43. Saul v. See, 2 La. 130; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wheat, 68 Tex. 133, 3 S. W. 455; Robinson v. Martell, 11 Tex. 149.

Inference from sheriff's return.—A sheriff's return that a witness cannot be found is no ground for a continuance; for the inference is that the sheriff was not informed of the witness' residence or that he had none in the parish; in either case there is laches. Saul v. See, 2 La. 130.

44. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wheat, 68 Tex. 133, 3 S. W. 455. See also Evans v. Pond, 30 Mo. 235. A defendant, who on the day following the filing of the answer, issued a subpoena for a witness residing within four blocks of the court-house, which was returned "Not served" (witness having been in town), has exercised proper diligence; and at the trial five days thereafter it was held error to refuse a continuance for absence of said witness. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 380, 45 S. W. 819.

45. Searls v. Munson, 17 Ill. 558; Bentley v. Gerke Brewing Co., 14 Ky. L. Rep. 766. Compare Fiske v. Berryhill, 10 Iowa 203.

Witness not in condition to testify.—The absence from the court-house of a witness who is in town, but not in a situation to testify when called, is sufficient ground to postpone the trial until the next day, without any further showing. Leckie v. Crain, 12 La. 432.

46. Searls v. Munson, 17 Ill. 558; Bentley v. Gerke Brewing Co., 14 Ky. L. Rep. 766; Jordon Shoe Co. v. Hilig, 70 Mo. App. 301; Bailey v. State, 26 Tex. App. 341, 9 S. W. 758; Burlington F. Ins. Co. v. Coffman, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 439, 35 S. W. 406; Dillingham v. Chapman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 677. Compare Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wheat, 68 Tex. 133, 3 S. W. 455.

Extent and limits of rule.—This, it has been held in one decision, is so, although the original presence of the witness was not effected by the service of a subpoena. Bentley v. Gerke Brewing Co., 14 Ky. L. Rep. 766. While others hold that under these circum-

k. Tender of Fees. The witness should in all cases be tendered his legal fees and expenses of travel when the subpoena is served, and a failure so to do will usually defeat an application for a continuance based upon his absence,⁴⁷ unless such payment has been waived by the witness;⁴⁸ and especially is this the case where more than one application has been made.⁴⁹

1. Failure to Procure Deposition—(1) IN GENERAL. Where a party cannot produce his witnesses in court and yet desires to rely upon their evidence, it is his duty, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, to secure their depositions, or it must be shown to the satisfaction of the court that the employment of such means would have been ineffectual.⁵⁰ Where a witness has remained within the state a stances it is discretionary with the court whether a continuance should be granted. Sheppard v. Lark, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 576. See also Voorhees v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Iowa 735, 30 N. W. 29, 60 Am. Rep. 823.

The absence of a witness living in a foreign jurisdiction is not ground for a continuance, he having been present at a previous time during the trial and no subpoena being served on him. Langener v. Phelps, 74 Mo. 189.

47. Thurman v. Virgin, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 785; Ogden v. Gibbons, 5 N. J. L. 518; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Hall, 83 Tex. 675, 19 S. W. 121; Texas Transp. Co. v. Hyatt, 54 Tex. 213; East Texas Land, etc., Co. v. Texas Lumber Co., 21 Tex. Civ. App. 411, 52 S. W. 645; Doll v. Mundine, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 96, 26 S. W. 87. In Ogden v. Gibbons, 5 N. J. L. 518, 627, the court said: "Can we, under the words of this section, consider a witness lawfully subpoenaed for the purpose of punishment for non-attendance unless the fee be paid or tendered? Clearly not. And can we say that the process has not been legally served when we are about to punish the witness, and yet that it has been legally served when we are inquiring into the default of the party and determining whether he has used due diligence? that it is legal for one purpose and not for another? This would seem an unfit state of things."

Rule under the Texas statute.—On a first application for a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses it is not necessary that their fees have been paid or tendered them. Blum v. Bassett, 67 Tex. 194, 3 S. W. 33; Texas Transp. Co. v. Hyatt, 54 Tex. 213; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 170. In Bryce v. Jones, 38 Tex. 205, it was made to appear by counter-affidavits that the case had been regularly reached on the preceding day when the absence of the witnesses became known, and at the request of plaintiffs the case was put off until the next day. The court held that the plaintiffs should have resorted to an attachment, and not having placed themselves in a condition to do so by tendering the witnesses their fees, they were wanting in diligence. The facts of that case were peculiar, and the decision does not necessarily involve the rule that in ordinary cases a first application for a continuance must show that the witness fees were tendered. Texas Transp. Co. v. Hyatt, 54 Tex. 213.

[IV, S, 13, k]

The tender of an insufficient amount of witness fees has, so far as the right to a continuance is concerned, the same effect as a failure to make any tender. Kimball v. Bryan, 56 Iowa 632, 10 N. W. 218.

48. Thurman v. Virgin, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 785.

Absence on account of sickness.—In Dillingham v. Ellis, 86 Tex. 447, 25 S. W. 618, it was held error to refuse a continuance for the absence of a witness because his fees had not been tendered him, where his absence was caused by sickness and not from unwillingness to attend.

sufficient time for his deposition to be taken, his subsequent departure will constitute no ground of relief at the date of trial.⁵¹ So the fact that a material witness has remained without the state will afford no reason, for in such case the party applying should have issued a commission to take his testimony before the cause was brought on to be heard.⁵² It is only in extreme cases, where there has been no negligence or laches on the part of the applicant,⁵³ or where serious

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 87.

Lost lease.—Where plaintiff failed to take the deposition of a witness residing in another county as to the execution of a lost lease, on which his case depended, relying on the presence of the witness, it was held that he was not entitled to a continuance on the ground of surprise, because he was not allowed to show the contents of the lease. Read v. Allen, 63 Tex. 154.

Second deposition.—An application for a second continuance on the ground of an absent witness will not be granted, where it appears that the deposition of the witness had been taken, and his presence was desired to explain some portions of it, that no effort had been made to again take his deposition, and that the witness was in the employ of the applicant (East Line, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 71 Tex. 703, 10 S. W. 298, 10 Am. St. Rep. 804); so where the defendant applied for a continuance on the ground that from a misunderstanding of the interrogatories a deposition formerly taken failed to show all the material facts the witness might have testified to, it was held that as by the exercise of sufficient diligence defendant might have retaken the deposition a continuance would not be granted (Cole v. Choteau, 18 Ill. 439).

Thus where, on the trial of an issue in a divorce case, the respondent, the husband, had been served with a habeas corpus ad testificandum directing him to produce the two daughters of the parties who were at a school near Boston, and he made return that the children had been sent to school more than six months before, and that the libellant, the mother, had visited them there and had free access to them, it was held that as libellant knew of the whereabouts of the children and could have taken their depositions under a commission, she had been guilty of laches in not doing so, and could not obtain a continuance of the cause because of their absence. Koecker v. Koecker, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 364.

Texas.—McMahan v. Busby, 29 Tex. 191; Green v. Crow, 17 Tex. 180; Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Kennedy, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 654, 35 S. W. 335; Merchant v. Bowyer, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 367, 22 S. W. 763.

United States.—King of Spain v. Oliver, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,812, Pet. C. C. 217.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 87 et seq.

Illness of non-resident.—Where witnesses living out of the state are sick and not able to appear at the trial, and no effort has been made to take their depositions, the fact of their sickness is no ground for a continuance. Hamiltons v. Moody, 21 Mo. 79.

Special messenger.—A continuance was properly refused where the party desiring the testimony of a witness absent in a distant parish, instead of taking out a commission to examine him despatched a special messenger to bring the witness; by doing so he took upon himself the risk of the witness being in court on the trial. Jeter v. Heard, 12 La. Ann. 3.

53. Miles v. Danforth, 32 Ill. 59; McLane v. Harris, 1 Mo. 700.

Floods.—Where defendant gave notice of taking the deposition of a material witness and proceeded on his journey to take the testimony, and on arriving at the Missouri river found it so high and full of running ice that it could not be crossed until too late to reach the place of taking the deposition in time, he has shown sufficient diligence to entitle him to a continuance. McLane v. Harris, 1 Mo. 700.

injustice would result, that the court will overlook the failure to provide evidence otherwise obtainable through the ordinary channels.⁵⁴ Where opportunity has once existed for this course, he cannot, upon the calling of the case, urge the lack of such evidence as a ground of continuance in his favor.⁵⁵

(II) RELiance UPON PROMISE TO ATTEND. The same rule of diligence obtains in regard to the taking of depositions as in the service of subpoenas.⁵⁶ A party has no right to rely upon the promise of a witness to attend the trial, but must take his deposition at his own peril.⁵⁷

m. Delay in Procuring Deposition. Delay in taking depositions is no ground for a continuance; the failure to procure such evidence in time for the trial is not such an exercise of diligence as is required;⁵⁸ especially is this so where a

Witnesses in military service.—Where an application for a continuance was made upon the ground of the absence of two witnesses, both of whom were, and had been for some time prior to the commencement of the suit, in the military service of the United States, and both of whom had all the time been absent from the state with their regiments, but, owing to the disturbed condition of the country, no deposition was returned, it was held to show sufficient diligence. Miles v. Danforth, 32 Ill. 59.

54. Stone v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 3 S. D. 330, 53 N. W. 189.

Substitution of attorneys.—Defendant's affidavit for a continuance on the ground of the absence of non-resident witnesses stated that its and plaintiff's attorneys agreed to take the depositions of the witnesses; that the attorney for plaintiff was unable to attend to the matter at the time agreed upon and requested a postponement; that he subsequently said that he proposed to withdraw from the case, and agreed that no further steps should be taken until the appointment of another attorney; that no notice was given defendant of the substitution of another attorney until three days before the case was called for trial; and that the witnesses or their depositions could be procured should a continuance be granted. It was held that due diligence was shown, and that defendant was entitled to a continuance. Stone v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 3 S. D. 330, 53 N. W. 189.

55. Plaintiff, failing to take the deposition of his co-plaintiff, who was in an advanced stage of consumption, knowing that his testimony would be wanted on the trial, is not entitled to a continuance on account of the absence of such co-plaintiff (Worsham v. McLeod, (Miss. 1891) 11 S. 107); so where a witness was afflicted with epilepsy, with occasional intervals of relief, a party was required to show why he could not have taken his deposition during such intervals (Wilson v. King, 83 Ill. 232).

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 90.

Co-defendants.—Where a defendant, having good reason to believe that his co-defendant, who is a resident of Canada and has not been served, will be present at the trial as he has promised, in reliance on such promise has failed to take his testimony by deposition, and the testimony of the co-defendant is material, a continuance of the case may be granted to allow such testimony to be taken. Mowat v. Brown, 17 Fed. 718, 5 McCrary 420.

Employees of applicant.—Where defendant moved for a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses, employees of defendant, and the only excuse for not taking their depositions was that their personal attendance had been promised to defendant's attorneys by the officers of defendant, it was held that the motion was properly denied. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Stephenson, 131 Ind. 203, 30 N. E. 1082.

Second deposition.—Plaintiff asked for a continuance because of the absence of a material witness, who was also a defendant. The witness's deposition had been taken and lost. It might have been retaken in time for trial by strictly pursuing the statutory method. The delay was caused by the promise of defendant's counsel to cross plaintiff's interrogatories and have the witness present at the trial. It was held that, although plaintiff had not used the utmost diligence, the refusal to grant a continuance, it being the first application, was error. State v. Rohmberg, 69 Tex. 212, 7 S. W. 195.

Iowa.—Owens v. Hart, 66 Iowa 565, 24 N. W. 41. On a motion for a continuance to take testimony in New York, the California court held that a delay of thirty-five days after filing the answer showed a want of due diligence and denied the motion (Pierson v. Holbrook, 2 Cal. 598); so, where an Iowa commission had been issued to take a deposition in Oregon in December, 1859, on which no return had been made in June, 1860, it was held that the party applying for a continuance on this ground had not shown

n. Documentary Evidence. Documentary evidence, being as a rule stationary in its character and easy of access upon the exercise of reasonable diligence, it is no error to refuse a continuance for its absence, where no such diligence has been shown.⁶⁰ The question as to whether a party has used reasonable diligence in any given case depends upon the legal means at his disposal⁶¹ and the time within which he is required to act.⁶²

o. Excuse For Laches. A party who desires a continuance on the ground of

Utah.—Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. v. Gisborne, 5 Utah 319, 15 Pac. 253.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 88.

Indiana statute.—"Every deposition taken in accordance with the provisions of this article [Ind. Rev. Stat. p. 723, § 286], and intended to be read in evidence, must be filed in the proper Court, at least one day before the time at which such cause in which such deposition is to be used stands on the docket for trial; or, if filed afterward, and claimed to be used on the trial, the adverse party should be entitled to a continuance, at the cost of the party filing such deposition." Dare v. McNutt, 1 Ind. 148.

Revival of action.—Where a cause is suspended before trial by the death of one of the parties, the adverse party is not negligent in waiting until it is revived before taking depositions of absent witnesses, although such depositions might be legal if taken before revival. Jaquith v. Davidson, 21 Kan. 341.

59. Where a party applies the second time during the same term for a continuance because of absence of a witness, and it appears that no effort was made to procure the testimony of such witness by deposition until during the term, and after the first application was refused, due diligence is not shown (Hunt v. Makemson, 56 Tex. 9); so a continuance was refused where a party had from March to November to take depositions on a previous continuance (Owens v. Hart, 66 Iowa 565, 24 N. W. 41).

Expenses not provided for.—A second continuance for absence of witnesses is properly refused where commissions to take depositions out of the state were mailed about six weeks before trial, without sending any money or making any arrangements with the officers. Little v. State, 75 Tex. 616, 12 S. W. 965.

Austin*, 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 191, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 1072.

Evidence of title.—A party is chargeable with notice of the materiality of a map or document constituting a part of his claim of title to land, and is not entitled to a continuance to enable him to procure such document. McFaddin v. Preston, 54 Tex. 403.

Failure to produce books.—It was important for a plaintiff to prove the exact amount and date of a payment. He summoned a witness whose books would prove it, but did not tell him to bring his books, nor what he wanted to prove by them. The trial having come on, the court held that he was not entitled to a continuance to enable him to procure the books, as he should have seen to it before. He had already been indulged with two continuances. Spengler v. Davy, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 381.

61. Alvord v. U. S., 1 Ida. 585; Union County v. Axley, 53 Ill. App. 670; Park v. Larkin, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 17.

Copy of foreign judgment.—A motion for a continuance for the purpose of allowing a party to secure a copy of a foreign judgment is properly overruled, where the evidence shows that the only steps taken by movant to secure the copy was to write to the clerk of the foreign court six weeks before the trial, requesting him to send such copy, with the fee bill. Union County v. Axley, 53 Ill. App. 670.

Illness of custodian of documents.—A continuance will be granted a party to obtain the certificate of the secretary of state, where he shows that he has made one attempt and that the secretary was too ill to attend to the matter. Park v. Larkin, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 17.

United States vouchers.—In Alvord v. U. S., 1 Ida. 585, a United States marshal was sued, with his sureties, upon his official bond, for converting to his own use money received for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the courts. He defended upon the ground of having expended the money to pay various accounts for which he claimed that the United States was responsible, and when the case was called for trial asked for a continuance on the ground that he had made application to the accounting officers of the treasury department for vouchers and for a transcript of his accounts, and that his application had been so recently refused that he had not since had time to prepare for trial. It was held that, not having shown that he had used the necessary means to procure his evidence, a continuance was properly refused.

62. In Dunson v. Pitts, 67 Ga. 767, it was held no ground for a continuance that complainants, fifteen days after the application absence of witnesses or evidence must either show that he has made reasonable efforts to procure such evidence or some good reason for not doing so.⁶³ It is no excuse to set up ignorance of facts,⁶⁴ or the party's reliance on a decision in his favor on a question yet in issue.⁶⁵

T. Amendment of Pleadings — 1. IN GENERAL. Any substantial amendment for an injunction, "believed that defendants had certain papers" which in answering they had failed to produce.

Correction of deed.—A party's neglect, extending through a period of seven months, to take any steps toward proving the execution of a deed known by him to be an essential link in his chain of title shows a want of diligence sufficient to justify the trial court in denying his application for a continuance, predicated on the absence of such testimony. Poole v. Jackson, 66 Tex. 380, 1 S. W. 75. See also Connor v. Griffin, 27 Iowa 248.

Insufficient time to procure evidence.—Where a rule is awarded in open court against an attorney to disbar him, and service accepted by him, and a trial and judgment had on the same day, it is error to refuse him a continuance to procure documentary evidence necessary to his defense, which is absent from the county. Walker v. State, 4 W. Va. 749.

Supplying missing record.—One who has had from one quarterly term to another to supply a missing record, and who without sufficient reason has neglected to comply with the order, cannot claim a continuance. Kenney v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 80 Mo. 573.

63. Illinois.—Dunlap v. Davis, 10 Ill. 84.

Indiana.—Brown v. Shearon, 17 Ind. 239; Deming v. Ferry, 8 Ind. 418.

Nebraska.—Violet v. Rose, 39 Nebr. 660, 58 N. W. 216.

Pennsylvania.—Davidson v. Brown, 4 Binn. 243.

Tennessee.—Todd v. Wiley, 3 Humphr. 576.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 89.

Examination of books.—A statement that an absent witness, being an accountant, has not had time to make certain necessary examinations of account-books does not show a valid excuse for failure to procure his attendance. Brown v. Shearon, 17 Ind. 239.

Pendency of application for security of costs is not an excuse for failure to subpoena witnesses. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Styron, 66 Tex. 421, 1 S. W. 161.

Sickness does not excuse lack of diligence in procuring testimony, unless it be shown that there was not time between the service of process and the commencement of the illness to enable the party to procure the testimony. Deming v. Ferry, 8 Ind. 418.

Excuses held sufficient.—An application for a first continuance will be granted where the affidavit shows facts tending to prove a complete and effectual defense to the plaintiff's action, and where it appears that all reasonable diligence has been used in preparing for trial, and the circumstances of the case sufficiently excuse the want of the ordinary statutory diligence entitling a party to a continuance. Jordan v. Robson, 27 Tex. 612. Where defendant in attachment was not served personally, and no copy of the notice was mailed to him, he will be granted a continuance for the purpose of taking depositions, where he heard of the pendency of the action too late to have them taken in time. Lockhart v. Wolf, 82 Ill. 37.

64. That the materiality of the evidence for which a continuance is asked was not ascertained by the affiant "until the present term of the court" does not dispense with showing of diligence to procure it. Wheeler v. Styles, 28 Tex. 240.

Belief that appeal had been taken.—Where the defendant's affidavit for a continuance stated as a reason why he had taken no steps to procure the testimony of a material witness that he was under the belief that the plaintiff had appealed from the judgment of the court below granting him—the defendant—a new trial, it was held that this ignorance furnished no excuse. Todd v. Wiley, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 576.

Ignorance of answer.—That the plaintiff did not know what defendant's answer would be, or whether he would answer, is no excuse for failure to bring his witnesses to establish his case, and does not entitle him to a continuance for the absence of his witnesses. Osborne v. Scott, 13 Tex. 59.

Ignorance that case would be called.—The fact that a party did not know that his case would be called is no excuse for not issuing subpoenas in time to have his witnesses present. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Snyder, (Tex. Sup. 1891) 18 S. W. 559.

Reliance on co-defendant.—Where one of two defendants asked for a continuance on the ground of surprise, in that he had relied on his co-defendant to furnish evidence to support an auditor's report in favor of the co-defendant, but that the latter had compromised with plaintiff, it was held that the motion was properly denied, since neither defendant had taken steps to have witnesses present to sustain the report. House v. Cessna, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 7, 24 S. W. 962.

Witness leaving the state.—That defendant's brother was a material witness, that he had sailed for a foreign port "upon a sudden determination known to this affirmant but a short time, three or four days, before his departure, and has not since returned. That the affirmant did not advert at the time to the circumstance of the said Elijah's testimony being material," is not a sufficient ground for postponing the trial. Davidson v. Brown, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 243.

65. Violet v. Rose, 39 Nebr. 660, 58 N. W. 216; McBride v. Willis, 82 Tex. 141, 18 S. W. 205.

of the pleadings that operates as a surprise at the trial will usually entitle a party to a continuance,⁶⁶ and a continuance for such cause is usually authorized by statute.⁶⁷ In ordinary cases, however, the mere filing of an amended pleading does not of itself entitle the opposite party to a continuance.⁶⁸ The amendment

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 99.

Amendment by consent.—An amended answer filed by consent of the parties, after the notice of trial has been served, entitles the plaintiff to a continuance. Whitefoot v. Leffingwell, 90 Wis. 182, 63 N. W. 82.

Amendment of bill of particulars.—If defendant is denied a continuance after plaintiff's amendment of his bill of particulars by the insertion of a credit and dates on the debtor side, whereby he is surprised so as not to be prepared for trial, he may properly claim that his rights have been prejudiced. Lester v. Thompson, 91 Mich. 245, 51 N. W. 893. The defendant cannot, however, have a continuance because a more specific bill of particulars is filed within ten days of the trial term. Phelps v. Spruance, 1 Colo. 414.

New ground of defense.—Where the defendant by mistake gave notice of a new ground of defense, in consequence of which the plaintiff sent away a material witness who was still absent, in order to obtain additional testimony, the court granted a continuance, although the plaintiff was under a rule to try or non pros., and although the defendant offered to resume his original ground of defense. Echeveria v. Nairac, Wall. Sr. 29, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,261.

must be of a substantial character,⁶⁹ it must appear that the applicant is less prepared to go to trial in consequence of the amendment as allowed than if the amendment had been denied,⁷⁰ and that he has a meritorious defense to the claim shown by the new matter as well as the original pleading.⁷¹ The granting of a continuance on the ground of surprise caused by the amendment of pleadings is largely within the discretion of the court, and this discretion will not be disturbed unless it appears that it has been abused.⁷²

2. MATERIALITY OF AMENDMENTS — a. In General. The question whether a continuance ought or ought not to be granted in any particular case, because of an amendment, depends upon the materiality of the amendment which is alleged as Missouri.—Colhoun v. Crawford, 50 Mo. 458.

New York.—Rosenburg v. Third Ave. R. Co., 47 N. Y. App. Div. 323, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 1052.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 99 et seq.

Leave to recall witness.—Where the declaration is amended after the testimony is all in, and the arguments of counsel concluded, the fact that the defendant needs additional testimony to meet the changed issues is no ground for continuing the cause, where the additional testimony is merely the evidence of a witness who has already testified, and it is not shown that he could not be recalled, and leave to recall him is not asked. Wolfe v. Johnson, 152 Ill. 280, 38 N. E. 886 [affirming 45 Ill. App. 122].

Unnecessary amendments furnish no ground for continuance. Danville, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 90 Va. 340, 18 S. E. 278.

69. See infra, IV, T, 2 et seq.

Action for personal injuries.—Where, in an action for personal injuries received while operating a planing machine, the first paragraph in the complaint alleged that plaintiff had been employed to work at a dangerous machine without being warned of its danger, the filing of an additional paragraph alleging that the machine was not in safe condition, and that plaintiff was injured by reason of its defective condition, will entitle defendants to a continuance on the ground of surprise. Danley v. Scanlon, 116 Ind. 8, 17 N. E. 158.

70. Georgia.—Atlanta Land, etc., Co. v. Haile, 106 Ga. 498, 32 S. E. 606.

Iowa.—Foote v. Burlington Gas Light Co., 103 Iowa 576, 72 N. W. 755.

Michigan.—Crane Lumber Co. v. Bellows, 116 Mich. 304, 74 N. W. 481.

West Virginia.—Ravenswood Bank v. Hamilton, 43 W. Va. 75, 27 S. E. 296.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 99 et seq.

Introduction of new evidence.—Where a continuance is asked for on the ground of surprise caused by the filing of an amendment, it must appear that the amendment makes it necessary to produce evidence which would not have been required if the amendment had not been made. Fisk v. Miller, 13 Tex. 224.

Judgment on single count.—The plaintiff's praying judgment by default on the first count of a declaration, after argument of a demurrer to the second count, does not entitle the defendant to a continuance. Alley v. Neely, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 200.

71. Ewing v. Beauchamp, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 496; Colhoun v. Crawford, 50 Mo. 458; Keltenbaugh v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 34 Mo. App. 147; Ravenswood Bank v. Hamilton, 43 W. Va. 75, 27 S. E. 296.

72. Snediker v. Poorbaugh, 29 Iowa 488; Taylor v. Berry, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 523. And see Union Bank v. Ridgely, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 324.

After demurrer sustained.—It is within the discretion of the trial court to refuse a continuance on the ground of surprise caused by matters alleged in an amended petition filed after demurrer had been sustained to the original petition. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Duvall, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 348, 35 S. W. 699. But where a demurrer to a bill is sustained, and the plaintiffs amend at bar, and defendants neither demur to the amended bill nor ask for delay, there is no error in not continuing the case for the term. Taylor v. Cox, 32 W. Va. 148, 9 S. E. 70.

Different defense.—Where plaintiff filed with his declaration an affidavit showing the nature of his demand and the amount due, and defendant, to avoid judgment by default, filed an affidavit of defense to a certain sum which the plaintiff confessed, it was proper to refuse a continuance thereafter to enable defendant to interpose a different defense to the whole cause of action. Allen v. Watt, 69 Ill. 655.

In Pennsylvania it is held that the allowance or refusal of a continuance in case of an amendment is a matter of discretion with the court below, which is not reviewable. Walthour v. Spangler, 31 Pa. St. 523; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Clarke, 2 Pittsb. (Pa.) 48, 7 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 129.

Verification of pleading.—After striking from the files a corporation's pleading because not verified by an officer, it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse a continuance for the purpose of procuring a proper verification. Banks v. Gay Mfg. Co., 108 N. C. 282, 12 S. E. 741.

a ground of relief. Where the amendment is material to the issues pleaded and no sufficient time has been offered to secure evidence thereon the continuance should in all cases be granted.⁷³

b. Formal or Immaterial Amendments. A continuance should not be allowed for merely formal or immaterial amendments or amendments not calculated to surprise or cause prejudice to the adverse party.⁷⁴

73. Illinois.—Link v. Architectural Iron Works, 24 Ill. 551; Hawk v. Lands, 8 Ill. 227; Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Marseilles Mfg. Co., 6 Ill. 236; Covell v. Marks, 2 Ill. 525.

Missouri.—Tunstall v. Hamilton, 8 Mo. 500; Alt v. Groschlose, 61 Mo. App. 409.

Texas.—Lindsley v. Parks, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 527, 43 S. W. 277; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 450, 29 S. W. 186.

United States.—Wyatt v. Harden, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,106a, Hempst. 17.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 100.

Allegation of warranty.—An amendment of the declaration after the proofs are in and the argument has begun, alleging a verbal warranty in addition to the written warranty sued on, is material, and entitles defendant to a continuance. Jennings v. Sheldon, 53 Mich. 431, 19 N. W. 132.

Averment of demand.—Where plaintiff sues on defendant's promise to deliver a certain commodity when requested, and is allowed to amend his declaration by averring a demand, such amendment is material and entitles defendant to a continuance. Ewing v. French, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 170.

Effect of filing demurrer.—An additional paragraph counting on a cause of action accrued since the service of the summons is ground for continuance, but filing a demurrer to the paragraph would be a waiver of the right. Farrington v. Hawkins, 24 Ind. 253.

Foreclosure proceedings.—Where a bill for foreclosure is amended after a demurrer is sustained on the ground that there is no allegation as to whether any proceedings at law have been had to recover the mortgage debt the defendant is entitled to a continuance. Edwards v. Hough, 5 Ind. 149. Also so held where the amendment alleged that the mortgagee was compelled to pay out money. Lewis v. Richey, 5 Ind. 152.

Where an amendment of a libel for a divorce is granted, and a new charge of adultery on a different date is inserted, a continuance will be granted, if the respondent is not prepared to defend against such charge. Tourtelot v. Tourtelot, 4 Mass. 506.

Texas.—Fisk v. Miller, 13 Tex. 224; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Bagwell, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 356, 22 S. W. 829.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 101.

Amendment to avoid variance.—In chancery an amendment to avoid a variance and not materially changing the bill is not ground for a continuance. Martin v. Everisal, 36 Ill. 222. See also Farwell v. Meyer, 35 Ill. 40.

Assignment of note.—The amending of the declaration in a suit on a sealed note by inserting an averment that the maker, defendant, had had notice of its assignment to plaintiff is unnecessary and is no cause for continuance. Helms v. Sisk, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 503.

Cause of action described in different language.—The filing of an amended petition on the same cause of action described in different language is not ground for a continuance of right. York v. Clemens, 41 Iowa 95.

3. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO PARTIES. Mere formal amendments as to parties will not as a general rule afford a ground of continuance,⁷⁵ nor will amendments consisting in the addition of new parties to the action⁷⁶ or the dismissal or discontinuance of the action as to parties already of record.⁷⁷ An amendment show

In an action by a female for slander, the plaintiff amended her declaration by asserting that she was "sole and unmarried." It was held that the amendment was wholly immaterial, and no cause for a continuance. Russel v. Martin, 3 Ill. 492.

Insertion of attorney's name.—A continuance will not be granted upon allowing plaintiff to amend by inserting his attorney's name and subscription to the declaration, it having been properly indorsed thereon. McMahan v. Murphy, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 535.

Signature of party.—The amendment of a petition by allowing plaintiff to sign it does not entitle the defendant to a continuance. Missouri River, etc., R. Co. v. Owen, 8 Kan. 409; Harvey v. Renfro, 7 Mo. 187.

Amendments narrowing issues.—A trial amendment in an action for injuries on the ground of negligence, after all the evidence had been introduced without objection, which evidence was admissible under the complaint as it stood, the amendment merely narrowing the issue by specifying the negligence, and thereby limiting plaintiff's right to recover, to proof of the specific acts of negligence charged, did not entitle defendant to a continuance for surprise. Mirrieles v. Wabash R. Co., 163 Mo. 470, 63 S. W. 718.

Parties are bound to take notice that in all cases amendments will be granted on fair and reasonable conditions, and where there is enough of substance in the defective pleading to fairly apprise the opposite party of what he is required to meet, he cannot claim a continuance on the ground that it has worked a surprise. Magnuson v. Billings, 152 Ind. 177, 52 N. E. 803; Parsons Water Co. v. Hill, 46 Kan. 145, 26 Pac. 412; Walthour v. Spangler, 31 Pa. St. 523; Gillett v. Robbins, 12 Wis. 319.

It is within the discretion of the court to allow a continuance for an amendment substituting proper parties, when the cause of action is not changed. McDermott v. Dearnley, 1 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 69.

Misspelling of party's name.—An amendment of the writ by correcting a misspelling of the plaintiff's name does not entitle the defendant to a continuance. Beck v. Williams, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 374.

76. The joinder, during the trial, of plaintiff's husband, affords no ground for a continuance, where defendant cannot claim surprise. Merrill v. St. Louis, 12 Mo. App. 466.

A substitution of the personal representatives of a deceased plaintiff does not entitle defendant to a continuance (Masterson v. Brown, 51 Iowa 442, 1 N. W. 791); so the revival of an action in the name of the administrator of a deceased defendant, and permitting such defendant to file pleadings, does not necessarily compel a continuance, under Kan. Code, § 437. Rice v. Hodge, 26 Kan. 164.

Substantial change of claim or defense.—Where a complaint is amended by substituting parties different from those in whose names the suit was originally brought, the defendant will not be entitled to a continuance, unless such amendment substantially changes the claim or the defense. Hubler v. Pullen, 9 Ind. 273, 68 Am. Dec. 620.

To a creditors' bill, new parties complainant, belonging to the class in whose behalf the bill was filed, may be made while the trial is in progress; and if their claims are undisputed their coming in at that stage will be no cause for suspending the trial or for granting a continuance at the instance of defendants. Burns v. Beck, 83 Ga. 471, 10 S. E. 121.

Where a lessor and lessee transfer each to the other one half of the damage accruing to them from a railroad company for injuries to their respective interests in land by a prairie fire, and a complaint by the lessor is amended by joining the lessee as a party plaintiff, an application for a continuance on the ground of surprise by the amendment is properly denied. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jagoe, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 1061.

77. Amendment of a bill by striking out an unnecessary party, between whom and the other defendants there was no joint interest, does not entitle the other defendants to a continuance. Elyton Land Co. v. Denny, 108 Ala. 553, 18 So. 561; Constitution Pub. Co. v. Way, 94 Ga. 120, 21 S. E. 139; Taylor v. Jones, 1 Ind. 17.

A discontinuance as to one defendant is not such an amendment as will entitle the other

ing the character in which a party appears in an action is frequently allowed, and a continuance on the ground of such allowance will almost invariably be denied;⁷⁸ but while this is the general rule the defendant may show by affidavit that he was surprised.⁷⁹

4. AMENDMENTS INCREASING DEMAND. An amendment of the declaration or petition increasing the demand does not entitle the defendant to a continuance unless he has been misled in preparing his defense;⁸⁰ but where the amendment would work a hardship upon the defendant, and operates as a fraud or surprise to him at the trial, unless further time were allowed for preparation, a continuance should be granted.⁸¹

5. AMENDMENTS WITHDRAWING PART OF DEMAND. Since a withdrawal of part of the demand is calculated to render the defendant better instead of less prepared for trial, an application for a continuance on such ground will not be considered.⁸²

6. AMENDING DESCRIPTION OF INSTRUMENT. As a general rule an amendment in the description of the instrument sued on will not constitute a ground for continuance,⁸³ unless the amendment describes a different instrument than the one upon to a continuance. Evans v. Marden, 154 Ill. 443, 20 N. E. 446 [affirming 54 Ill. App. 291, where it was held that the remaining defendant could not have a continuance even though he was not present at the trial]; Righton v. Sumter, 2 McCord (S. C.) 412.

78. Wilcox v. American Sav. Bank, 21 Colo. 348, 40 Pac. 881; Chattanooga, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson, 86 Ga. 676, 13 S. E. 109; Litchfield Coal Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ill. 590; Harvey v. Coffin, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 566.

Fiduciary capacity.—Where plaintiff at trial amends by leave of court so as to designate defendant as “surviving” executor, instead of merely executor, defendant is not entitled to a continuance. Barnes v. Scott, 29 Fla. 285, 11 So. 48.

79. Litchfield Coal Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ill. 590. And see Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Loveland, (Colo. App. 1901) 64 Pac. 381, holding that where during the trial the court erroneously allowed an amendment of the complaint whereby a corporation not previously a party was made defendant, and the corporation then waived the error by an appearance, the court erred in not continuing the case, so as to give the defendant time to prepare an answer and to secure its witnesses.

An amendment after verdict, enlarging the ad damnum to support the verdict, is material, and gives the defendant the right to a continuance. Brown v. Smith, 24 Ill. 196.

Election in trover.—Since plaintiff in a trover suit may postpone his election until the trial whether he will take hire as damages, an amendment on the trial as to the damages which plaintiff elected to take conferred no right on defendant to a continuance on the ground of surprise. Wilson Coal, etc., Co. v. Hall, etc., Mach. Co., 97 Ga. 330, 22 S. E. 530.

81. Central R., etc., Co. v. Jackson, 94 Ga. 640, 21 S. E. 845; Atwater v. Hager, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 189. See also Dobson v. Southern R. Co., 129 N. C. 289, 40 S. E. 42. Thus where a plaintiff in trespass alleged that defendant blocked up the public road in front of his shop, and just as the case was called for trial filed an additional count alleging special damages arising from the obstruction, defendant was entitled to a continuance at plaintiff's cost. McAfee v. McClure, 11 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 173. So where two declarations were filed in one suit, and, on a motion being made to compel plaintiff to elect, he was permitted to amend by uniting them and increasing the ad damnum, it was held a material amendment, entitling defendant to a continuance. Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Marseilles Mfg. Co., 6 Ill. 236.

Changing date of bill of exchange is no ground for continuance without showing surprise. Anderson v. Kanawha Coal Co., 12 W. Va. 526.

Insurance policy.—Where a complaint on a fire-insurance policy failed to set out the conditions therein, but otherwise correctly described the policy, and on the trial plaintiff was allowed to amend by making the policy a part of the complaint, there was no error in denying the defendant a continuance for surprise. Bonner v. Home Ins. Co., 13 Wis. 677.

which the suit was originally instituted.⁸⁴ The true test in this class of cases resolves itself into the question whether the adverse party is less prepared to go to trial.⁸⁵

7. AMENDING DESCRIPTION OF INJURY. The question whether a continuance will be granted for an amendment in the description of the injury sued for depends upon the previous means of information as to the claim on the part of the applicant;⁸⁶ and in the absence of such means of knowledge, whether the charge as contained in the amendment is necessarily included in or follows from the charge as originally made. In the last case it has been the custom of the courts to deny relief;⁸⁷ but where the amended charge sets up a cause of action not intimately connected with the original cause, they have granted an extension of time to prepare for the new issues presented.⁸⁸

8. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO TIME AND PLACE. Amendments in respect to time and place furnish no ground for granting a continuance, unless it be shown that the opposite party has been surprised thereby.⁸⁹

9. AMENDMENTS CHANGING FORM OF ACTION. Where an amendment changes the form of an action it is to be considered a new cause, and the defendant should in all such cases be entitled to a continuance.⁹⁰

10. ABSENCE OF SURPRISE AS GROUND OF REFUSING CONTINUANCE — a. In General. The keynote of the courts' decisions in this class of cases is the surprise occasioned the adverse party by the amendment as allowed, and in the absence of any showing to that effect the application will be invariably denied.⁹¹ And so where

Sealed instrument.—Where a declaration in covenant which did not show the writing declared on to be under seal was amended by inserting words describing the instrument as a writing obligatory, it was held a material amendment, entitling defendant to a continuance. *Kelly v. Erroneous description of place.—A continuance on the ground of surprise is properly refused where plaintiff is allowed after commencement of trial to amend his complaint to locate an accident at P, there being no such place as L mentioned in the complaint, and defendant having witnesses present to testify to the occurrence at P. San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Liitke, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 248.

Materiality of date necessary.—A defendant is not entitled to a continuance on the ground of an amendment changing the date of the injury complained of without showing that the date is material. Omaha v. Cane, 15 Nebr. 657, 20 N. W. 101.

the original pleadings are full enough to give reasonable premonition that the matter embraced in the amendment exists as a fact, and is likely to be used on the trial, a want of preparation by adverse counsel on the points of law applicable to it is no cause for a continuance on the ground of surprise.⁹²

b. Notice of Amendment. In one jurisdiction it has been held that the fact that plaintiff informed defendants of an intended amendment in time for them to have prepared to meet it is no reason for refusing defendants a continuance where the amendment is material, defendants being bound only to prepare to meet the issues made by the pleadings.⁹³ In another it was held that the court may refuse defendant a continuance because of an amendment, where a copy was served on him nearly a year before trial, although the original was not filed until three days before the trial;⁹⁴ but where a party has had no notice of an intended amendment and the same operated as a surprise at the trial he is entitled to a continuance.⁹⁵

c. Amendment to Meet Adversary's Objection. Where the effect of the amendment is merely to put the case exactly where the opposite party claims it should be no continuance should be granted him on the ground of surprise.⁹⁶

U. Surprise at Trial—1. IN GENERAL. Surprise at the trial may and frequently does operate as a ground for continuance,⁹⁷ unless the surprise is such as

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 109.

Discretion of court.—The question of granting a continuance in such cases is in the discretion of the court, and when the defendant does not show that he was surprised and not ready to proceed with the trial, it is no error to refuse the application. Folker v. Satterlee, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 213; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Goldberg, 68 Tex. 685, 5 S. W. 824.

Under Ga. Code, § 3521, providing for a continuance in the case of an amendment to the pleadings or proceedings, it is not improper to refuse such continuance when counsel of the opposite party does not state that "he is less prepared for trial than he would have been if such amendment had not been made, and how, and that such surprise is not claimed for the purpose of delay." Atlanta Cotton-Seed Oil Mills v. Coffey, 80 Ga. 145, 4 S. E. 759, 12 Am. St. Rep. 244. See also Haines v. Curry, 36 Ga. 602.

92. Jones v. Lavender, 55 Ga. 228. See also Ellen v. Lewison, 88 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 109.

Question not in issue.—When both parties, on the hearing of a suit in chancery, treat a question upon which there is no averment in the bill as though it were in issue, introducing testimony in reference to it, an amendment of the bill by inserting an averment in relation to that matter would occasion no surprise to the defendant, and he could not claim a continuance on account thereof. Moshier v. Knox College, 32 Ill. 155.

97. Where a party or his counsel were surprised as to the time or place of holding the court, a continuance ought to be granted, and refusing to grant it is error. Ross v. Austill, 2 Cal. 183.

Construction of rule of court.—Where plaintiff in a suit on a note is surprised by an unlooked-for construction of one of the rules of court, on which he had relied in making out his case, and he is thereby unexpectedly required to prove the handwriting of an indorser, a juror will be withdrawn and the cause continued. Sheldon v. Bahner, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 16.

Delay in filing deposition.—Under a statute of Indiana the filing of a deposition less than one day before the case stands for trial entitles the opposite party to a continuance. Dare v. McNutt, 1 Ind. 148.

Reliance on party's statements.—It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to continue an action for personal injuries on the ground of surprise caused by reliance on alleged statements of plaintiff and his counsel that he would abandon his claim for permanent injuries, where he was fully examined as to all of such injuries by a committee of medi-might have been obviated by the exercise of ordinary care and due diligence on the part of the party asking the continuance.⁹⁸

2. MISTAKE OF PARTY OR COUNSEL. In the absence of bad faith on the part of a party or his counsel, a mistake of fact will in some cases entitle him to a continuance;⁹⁹ but a mistake of law¹ or erroneous advice of counsel is not a sufficient ground for the desired relief.²

3. UNEXPECTED SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE. A party will usually be entitled to a continuance where a deposition or other written evidence is unexpectedly suppressed as evidence at the trial.³ In order to be entitled to such relief, however, the defect for which suppression is allowed must not be of a glaring character,⁴ cal experts appointed at defendant's instance, and the court might infer from all the facts that defendant was not misled by the statements, and the application does not show that he could procure witnesses who would on a second trial testify to the facts expected to be proven by him. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Brock, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 274.

Reapportionment of docket.—A court may reapportion the causes on its docket, and such reapportionment will furnish no ground of continuance, unless it can be shown that the party has been taken by surprise. Elliott v. Cadwallader, 14 Iowa 67.

99. Earnest v. Napier, 15 Ga. 306; Whitaker v. Whitaker, 43 S. W. 464, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1476; Shamberg v. Leslie, 41 S. W. 265, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 599.

Where parties subpoena the wrong witness and do not discover their error until the day before the trial, when too late to secure the attendance of the right witness, and his testimony is material, they should be allowed a continuance in the absence of any showing of bad faith on their part. Myers v. Trice, 86 Va. 835, 11 S. E. 428.

1. Hall v. Mount, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 73.

Cases arising under particular statute.—A motion for continuance was properly overruled where made on the ground that the court had announced that no cases arising under a certain statute would be tried, defendant absenting himself for that reason, and the court holding that the case in question did not arise under that statute, although defendant contended that it did. Bone v. Graves, 43 Ga. 312.

Written evidence required.—The fact that applicant did not expect that written evidence that he was the choice of the next of kin for administrator would be required is no ground for a continuance. Long v. Hugins, 72 Ga. 776.

2. Musgrove v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 211; Hall v. Mount, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 73; Myers v. Price, 86 Va. 835, 11 S. E. 428.

United States.—Waskern v. Diamond, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,248, Hempst. 1.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 96.

Non-production of papers.—When the evidence to prove a particular fact necessary to support the case is held incompetent at the hearing upon the bill, by reason of the non-production of a paper or want of proof of its loss, the court may in their discretion order the cause to stand over, to enable the party to exhibit further interrogatories, for the purpose of making an exhibit of the paper or accounting for its non-production. Doe v. Doe, 37 N. H. 268.

Where depositions are on file over two years, and no objection was made to them until offered as evidence on trial, and the same were suppressed, a continuance should be granted. Such parties may well claim that they were taken by surprise. Grigsby v. May, 57 Tex. 255.

Where exceptions which were not filed to the depositions until after the commencement of the trial are sustained and the witness whose deposition it is is unable to attend court, and his testimony is material, a continuance should be granted. Moore v. Smith, 88 Ky. 151, 11 S. W. 380, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 729.

4. Haun v. Wilson, 28 Ind. 296; Bonella v. Maduel, 26 La. Ann. 112.

Illegal commission.—An order refusing to continue will not be disturbed when it appears that the ground alleged was the filing of exceptions to the execution and return of a commission to obtain discovery sued out by defendant; that the exceptions were taken before the cause was begun; that no notice was given to plaintiff; that no commission is attached to the bill, and there is no entry of filing on the interrogatories; and that the interrogatories were not addressed to plaintiff, and did not contain the names of any witnesses, as required by Ga. Code, §§ 3811, 3877, 3900. Hatcher v. Mechanicsburg First Nat. Bank, 79 Ga. 538, 5 S. E. 127.

Deposition taken in another action.—Where a deposition taken in another action is attempted to be introduced in evidence, and the trial court refuses to allow its introduction, a refusal to grant defendant a continuance or one of which the applicant might have had knowledge by the exercise of reasonable diligence.⁵

4. EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE. The exclusion of testimony as incompetent is not such a surprise as will entitle a party to a continuance⁶ in the absence of some peculiar circumstance to take the case out of the general rule.⁷ A party is usually supposed to be prepared to prove his case by competent evidence, and the fact that he is surprised by a correct ruling of the court is no ground for a further extension of time.⁸

5. ADVERSARY'S EVIDENCE. A party is not entitled to a continuance in every case, where he is surprised by the evidence of his adversary.⁹ It is only in cases where such evidence could not have been reasonably anticipated under the pleadings¹⁰ or papers in the case that the court will entertain his application for on the ground of surprise, to enable him to procure the testimony of the witness whose deposition is excluded, is not an abuse of discretion, and the judgment will not be reversed therefor. Borland v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 78 Iowa 94, 42 N. W. 590.

5. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Ransom, 29 Kan. 298; Allen v. Hoxey, 37 Tex. 320.

6. McCutchin v. Bankston, 2 Ga. 244; Simpson v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 1076.

Evidence at former trial.—That testimony admitted at a former trial was rejected on the second trial was no ground for a continuance; there being no objection thereto at the former trial, and the party offering it not showing that he expects to supply its place if granted a continuance. Turner v. Tubersing, 67 Ga. 161. So in quo warranto defendant cannot, because of the exclusion of certain deeds of corporations, claim surprise as cause for continuance, on the ground that such deeds were admitted in evidence in a similar proceeding against it, where the record does not disclose such fact, and if they were so admitted the former suit was an application for an injunction, and there was no pleading denying the execution of the deeds. Lyons, etc., Toll R. Co. v. People, 29 Colo. 434, 68 Pac. 275.

7. In State v. Cooper, (Tenn. Ch. 1899) 53 S. W. 391, complainants and defendants stipulated in a suit to quiet title that exceptions to testimony for irrelevancy and immateriality might be taken at the trial without previously writing them out. At the trial defendants excepted to the introduction of a grant which had been on file for seven years, because it was a copy instead of the original, which was not shown to be lost, destroyed, or beyond complainants' power to produce. The exception being sustained, and complainants claiming surprise, the hearing was suspended for a day, so that affidavits could be filed showing the loss of the original, which was accordingly done. Under such circumstances it was held that, regardless of the stipulation, granting time to file the affidavit was proper.

8. French v. Groesbeck, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 19, 27 S. W. 43.

Defective acknowledgment.—Refusing to continue a trial to allow a party to obtain the testimony of a notary to prove the execution of an instrument excluded for defective acknowledgment is not an abuse of discretion.

Threadgill v. Bickerstaff, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 406, 26 S. W. 739.

Evidence impeaching credibility.—The fact that the defendant is taken by surprise, by evidence impeaching his credibility, is no ground for a continuance or a new trial. Every man is supposed to be able to support his general character for truth and veracity in the community in which he lives, especially when he has lived in that community for several years. Lynes v. Reed, 40 Ga. 237.

Extension of time to take testimony.—If a party is surprised by an extension of time to take testimony before a referee, and by the testimony thereby introduced, he should move for a continuance for that reason in order to procure further evidence on his side, but where he has failed to do so he cannot raise the question in the appellate court. People v. Holden, 28 Cal. 123. See also McLear v. Haggood, 85 Cal. 557, 24 Pac. 788.

Action for personal injuries.—Where, in an action for personal injuries, plaintiff alleged that by reason of his bruises and hurts he was rendered delirious at times, and defendant had the cause continued for a year, the latter is not entitled to a continuance to take the deposition of absent witnesses to contradict a deposition introduced by the plaintiff at the trial. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Buckelew, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 272, 22 S. W. 994.

Facts not disclosed by pleadings.—When on the trial the party is taken by surprise by the introduction of evidence legally admissible, to establish facts not disclosed by the pleadings, he has a right to a continuance on proper showing. Davis v. Millaudon, 14 La. Ann. 808.

Where non est factum is pleaded, the other party cannot claim to be surprised because the party so pleading goes on the stand and denies the execution of the paper. Gibson v. German-American Town Mut. Ins. Co., 85 Mo. App. 41.

Affidavit sufficient to put party on notice.—

further time to prepare himself,¹¹ and only then where the applicant has been guilty of no negligence in anticipating the testimony or in preparing himself to meet it when introduced.¹² Where a party has been honestly and without indiscretion on his part led to rely upon the testimony of a witness of his adversary, and thus prevented from summoning other witnesses who would testify to the same point, the failure of the witness to testify as expected is good ground to continue the cause;¹³ but one having full means of knowing what testimony will be used against him, and who goes to trial without taking means to ascertain it, is not entitled to a continuance, in the absence of any misleading act or declaration on the part of his adversary.¹⁴

6. APPLICANT'S EVIDENCE. A party is conclusively presumed to be familiar with the testimony to be given by his own witnesses, and in the absence of any unforeseen circumstances¹⁵ a continuance will be denied when asked because such testimony has resulted in a surprise to the applicant.¹⁶

As defendant some time before the trial filed its affidavit stating that plaintiff claimed to be injured "in her back," and asked for a physical examination of her person, which was granted, evidence of injury to her spinal cord and of injury to her eyes as a result thereof did not entitle defendant to a continuance on the ground of surprise. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Richmond, 67 S. W. 24, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2394.

In an action on a note by a transferee where plea of purchase after maturity has been duly filed, it is not error to refuse to continue the case that plaintiff may rebut defendant's evidence as to the time of the transfer. Pinson v. Bass, 114 Ga. 575, 40 S. E. 747.

11. Supplemental account by executor.—Where an executor on settlement was given leave to file a supplemental account before the jury was impaneled, a continuance on the ground of surprise was properly refused; the additional items being of the same nature as those in the original account, and capable of being attacked by the same evidence. Shiner v. Shiner, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 666, 40 S. W. 439.

Depositions without notice.—When depositions have been taken by one party without notice to the other, which are first opened at that term, the cause may be continued. Straas v. Marine Ins. Co., 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,518, 1 Cranch C. C. 343.

Abandonment of commission.—A continuance will be granted for surprise where plaintiffs, having abandoned a commission to take testimony abroad, in which defendant joined by filing cross interrogatories, sought at the trial to prove the same facts by another witness. Le Roy v. Delaware Ins. Co., 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,270, 2 Wash. 223.

12. Overcharge on freight.—In Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Kuthman, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 463, the plaintiff sued for a penalty on an overcharge on freight. After the trial commenced, plaintiff adduced testimony to prove the contents of the notice of the alleged overcharge, and the indorsement thereon by defendant's agent when he returned the same. Defendant objected to this evidence as secondary, and thereupon plaintiff proved the loss of the notice, whereupon defendant moved to continue the cause on the ground of surprise, and to obtain the testimony of the agent whom plaintiff alleged he had served with the notice. It was held that the motion was properly overruled, as defendant had no right to rely on the plaintiff's producing the notice and indorsement.

Alteration of instrument.—In McLear v. Hapgood, 85 Cal. 557, 24 Pac. 788, the defendant moved for a continuance on the ground of surprise, in that there was a material alteration in an instrument executed by him, and introduced in evidence by plaintiff, as he expected to show by a witness, to obtain whose attendance the continuance was asked. It was shown that he saw the instrument with the interlineation coming from plaintiff's possession the day before he moved for the continuance, but proceeded to examine the witnesses as to the execution of the instrument after the plaintiff's evidence was in. It was held that it was not error to refuse the continuance, since the motion came too late.

13. Maynard v. Cleveland, 76 Ga. 52.

14. Burrow v. Brown, 59 Tex. 457. Where an answer to a bill of discovery had been on file for nearly three months, it was held that the plaintiff could not object to going to trial on the ground that he was surprised by its being produced at the hearing. Robinson v. Francis, 7 How. (Miss.) 458.

Withdrawal of depositions.—An application by the defendant for a continuance of the cause upon the ground that it was taken by surprise, by finding certain depositions on file therein, was properly denied after the plaintiff had withdrawn such depositions. Congar v. Galena, etc., R. Co., 17 Wis. 477.

15. Shipp v. Suggett, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 5.

Where a witness is intoxicated on his examination at the trial, the proper practice is to move for a postponement on the ground of surprise. Shipp v. Suggett, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 5.

16. In Dempsey v. Taylor, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 126, 23 S. W. 220, where a witness was called by defendant to prove the execution of a deed, but refused to testify to its authenticity, a motion to continue the case on the ground of surprise was held to be properly denied,

7. NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE. Newly discovered evidence has usually been considered a good ground for continuance, especially where the failure of prior information is due to no lack of diligence on the part of the applicant.¹⁷ Where, however, no sufficient excuse is given for not sooner discovering the testimony sought to be obtained relief should be denied.¹⁸ The better practice in such cases is to move for a continuance before the trial has begun;¹⁹ but in some cases the courts have allowed relief even after the trial has commenced.²⁰

V. Improper Remarks of Counsel. Improper remarks by counsel in the course of argument, made before a jury has been drawn, but in the hearing of those who have been summoned to serve as jurors, can in no event be cause for a continuance. At most there should merely have been a postponement of the trial until other panels could be drawn from which to select a jury.²¹

V. THE APPLICATION.

A. Nature and Requisites. Applications for continuances in civil cases are generally regulated by statutory provisions²² or by rules of court.²³ The appliespecially where there was no offer to connect the deed with any defense or to show that it could not be established by other testimony.

Evidence of agent.—The refusal to continue a case on the ground of surprise will not be disturbed where the alleged surprise was caused by the evidence of the agent of the applicant. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Sparks, 62 Ga. 187.

17. California.—Hastings v. Hastings, 31 Cal. 95; Berry v. Metzler, 7 Cal. 418.

Georgia.—Chester Church v. Blount, 70 Ga. 779; Holmes v. Dobbins, 19 Ga. 630.

Kentucky.—Allcorn v. Rafferty, 4 J. J. Marsh. 220.

Louisiana.—Metoyer v. Larenandière, 6 Rob. 139; Davis v. Davis, 17 La. 259.

Pennsylvania.—Campbell v. Sproat, 1 Yeates 20.

Tennessee.—Potter v. Coward, Meigs 22.

United States.—Hourquibee v. Gerard, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,733, 2 Wash. 164; U. S. v. Stevenson, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,398.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 94.

Evidence in intestacy.—In Hourquibee v. Gerard, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,733, 2 Wash. 164, an action against an administrator was continued because only a few days before trial he had discovered material evidence among the intestate's papers.

Notice to produce instruments.—In Chester Church v. Blount, 70 Ga. 779, the plaintiffs in ejectment, having learned after the trial began that defendant's counsel had a deed supposed to have been lost, but which was necessary to complete plaintiff's claim of title, moved to require defendant to deliver the deed. On being overruled they moved for a continuance to give time for a notice to produce, which motion was also overruled. Under such circumstances it was held that the latter motion should have been granted, since the plaintiff was not in laches.

18. Thompson v. Autry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 47.

19. Metoyer v. Larenandière, 6 Rob. (La.) 139; Davis v. Davis, 17 La. 259.

New evidence not shown to be material.—After the evidence in a case has been closed, and the opening argument of plaintiff's counsel has been made, there is no abuse of discretion in denying a continuance on account of newly discovered evidence, where it does not appear otherwise than by hearsay that the newly discovered witness could or would testify to any material fact whatever, the party or his counsel not having had any personal communication with him. Central R. Co. v. Curtis, 87 Ga. 416, 13 S. E. 757.

20. Holmes v. Dobbins, 19 Ga. 630.

Mutilated receipt.—The discovery that a receipt on which defendant's defense was based had been mutilated is sufficient ground for a continuance, even after the testimony and argument are heard and the court has announced orally its finding. Hastings v. Hastings, 31 Cal. 95.

21. Thompson v. O'Connor, 115 Ga. 120, 41 S. E. 242.

22. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Aiken, 71 Tex. 373, 9 S. W. 437; Brown v. Abilene Nat. Bank, 70 Tex. 750, 88 S. W. 599. And see infra, V, D, 3.

23. Where the plaintiff in a common-law case, which has been placed on the calendar, and is called in its regular order for trial, desires a postponement until the next term for the purpose of obtaining the testimony of new witnesses, it is not the proper practice to move on affidavits for such postponement. The practice in such case is (by district court rule 240) regulated by the rules of the circuit court (rules 38 and 51), under which the plaintiff alone can notice a jury case for trial, and if when it is called he is not ready, all that is required is that he shall fail to respond, in which case it is marked as "Passed." After the jury for the term has been discharged, defendant may move for a judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff in answer thereto may show his excuse; and if it be deemed sufficient the court can permit him to stipulate to try the cause at the next term. U. S. v. Stevenson, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,398.

B. Who May Make Application. As a general rule parties to the record and their attorneys are the only ones whom the court recognizes as having power to continue or discontinue a suit. Third parties, although they may have an interest in the cause, are to be treated as mere strangers.²⁶

C. Time For Making Application. Where the time for applying for a continuance is prescribed by statute or rule of court, the application must be made within the time so prescribed or it must show an excuse for the delay.²⁷ If the application is made within the prescribed time, it will be deemed in time, although the order for continuance is not made until after the expiration for the time for making application.²⁸ Ordinarily, in the absence of unexpected and excusable delay, the application should be made before issue joined²⁹ or the jury sworn.³⁰ A continuance will ordinarily be denied when the application is made after the trial has begun;³¹ especially where the applicant could have, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, prepared himself for its earlier presentation.³²

D. The Affidavit—1. NECESSITY FOR AFFIDAVIT. In most, if not all, jurisdictions, the grounds on which a motion for continuance is based must be set out in writing and verified by affidavit.³³ This is usually required by statute or the Counsel in case.—An attorney who appears only as counsel in a case is not authorized to sign a stipulation for a continuance, even if he be an attorney and counselor of the court in which the suit is pending. The conduct of a suit, except in a matter arising in the argument or hearing before the court, is exclusively under the control of the attorney. Nightingale v. Oregon Cent. R. Co., 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,264, 2 Sawy. 338.

Interested person not a party.—It is not error to overrule an application for a continuance of the trial of an action, on the ground of the absence of material evidence, when such application is made on behalf of one not a party to the action, although he may be interested in the matter involved therein and in the result of the trial. *Burgwald v. Misjoinder of parties.—Defendant's application for a continuance on the ground of non-joinder of parties, made after answer filed, is too late, the want of diligence not being excused. Ryall v. Griffin, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 580.

Want of bill of particulars.—After filing a plea in bar, a motion for a continuance for the want of a bill of particulars comes too late. McCarthy v. Mooney, 41 Ill. 300.

Without deciding whether either would not be sufficient to justify a court in granting such motion, we have no hesitation in saying that the mode by affidavit has decidedly the preference, is better supported by precedent, is more consistent with reason, convenience and policy, and ought therefore to be required by the inferior courts."

Offer to file affidavit.—In Ryan v. People, 62 Ill. App. 355, which was an action of debt upon a bond, leave was given the plaintiff to file a replication to a plea of special performance theretofore filed. The defendant moved for a continuance, and offered to make and file an affidavit that by reason of filing such replication he was unprepared, etc., but did not do so. It was held that no question arose upon such an offer. That the act, not the offer, was what was required by the statute.

34. See infra, V, D, 3.

Attachment unavailing.—Under La. Code Prac. arts. 464, 471, a party, unable to procure his witnesses by attachment, must, to obtain a continuance, make the same affidavit as if no such process had issued. Lizardi v. Arthur, 16 La. 577.

Facts in knowledge of court.—The New Mexico statute provides that all applications for a continuance shall be supported by oath, unless the facts be within the knowledge of the court, in which case it shall be so stated upon the record. Dold v. Dold, 1 N. M. 397.

United States practice.—In the circuit court of the United States a continuance of a cause ready for trial will not be granted except on affidavit according to the English practice. Smith v. Barker, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,012.

Kentucky.—Carr v. Marshall, 1 Bibb 362. In Simms v. Alcorn, 1 Bibb 348, 349, the court said: "By requiring the filing of an affidavit, the business of the court is not interrupted, and their time is not lost by swearing and examining the party in court. Words are so fugitive and evanescent as to be recollected with difficulty; a written affidavit cannot be subject to this inconvenience: it is therefore better calculated to exhibit with precision the case on which the court adjudicated, whenever that adjudication is called in question, and the case to which the applicant actually did depose, whenever it may be necessary to use the same, either for or against him: for him, it is the safest if he is innocent, because it is not so liable to be misunderstood, and cannot be altered; and if he is guilty, for the same reason it is the best evidence to render his guilt manifest." Compare Locker v. Wigglesworth, 6 J. J. Marsh. 568, where it was held that after a party had been sworn and examined, and under that examination made a statement which entitled him to a continuance, on the ground that he had been misled by the conduct of his adversary, it was error to force him to trial merely because he refuses to put those statements into the form of a written affidavit.

Affidavit of party himself necessary.—In one of the early North Carolina cases (Sheppard v. Cook, 3 N. C. 241), it was held that a cause could not be continued but upon the affidavit of the party himself.

Party in interest.—An affidavit for continuance may be made by the party in interest, although he be not the nominal defendant (Hunter v. Kennedy, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 81, 1 L. ed. 46); so, where separate actions had been brought against the drawer and the indorser of a promissory note, the court held the affidavit of the drawer, the defendant in the first suit, of the absence of a material witness, sufficient to postpone the first trial of the action against the indorser (*Jackson v. affidavit may be received to move for a continuance, where circumstances excuse the non-production of the parties, as where the party is a non-resident. Lockhart v. Wolf, 82 Ill. 37; Lizardi v. Arthur, 16 La. 577; Penne v. Tourne, 2 La. 462.

45. Widner v. Hunt, 4 Iowa 355; Read v. Haynie, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,608, Hempst. 700. See also Lizardi v. Arthur, 16 La. 577; Sutton v. Wegner, 72 Wis. 294, 39 N. W. 775. Compare Doll v. Mundine, 84 Tex. 315, 19 S. W. 394.

Reason for rule.—"What a client says to his counsel, although it may be sworn to by the latter, is at least an unsworn statement, which the court cannot act on. It would be very dangerous to give it credence, for it would place the continuance of causes within the power of defendants, and without exacting from them any oath at all. All they would have to do would be to tell their counsel what they expected to prove, and for the counsel, having no knowledge of the facts on his part, and swearing to none, to simply swear that the client told him so and so. Such a practice cannot be tolerated: and no continuance can be granted on such an affidavit." Read v. Haynie, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,608, Hempst. 700.

Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 595, which provides that "the Court may require the moving party, where application is made on account of the absence of a material witness, to state on affidavit the evidence which he expects to obtain," is not imperative, and should not be required of counsel when he cannot be aided in making the affidavit by his client, who is excusably absent. Light v. Richardson, (Cal. 1893) 31 Pac. 1123.

Illness of client.—An attorney may, in case of illness of his client, make a showing for a continuance of a case, notwithstanding his client lives in the county. Roberts v. Moore, 27 Ga. 411.

lated by statute⁴⁸ or rule of court.⁴⁹ The affidavit must conform to the statutory requirements, and set forth one or more of the particular grounds therein mentioned.⁵⁰ In some states the statutory requirements differ according to whether the application is for a first, second, or subsequent continuance, and in such cases the allegations must vary according to the number of continuances asked.⁵¹

b. Method of Stating Facts. No presumption will be indulged in, in favor of the affidavit as presented.⁵² As in the case of a pleading, all intendments, so far as the affidavit is equivocal or uncertain, must be taken against it.⁵³ Affiant must set forth facts, and not mere conclusions of law,⁵⁴ and upon the facts thus stated the affidavit will be strictly construed against him.⁵⁵

c. Showing Good Faith of Applicant. The party applying must in all cases make it appear that his application is made in good faith⁵⁶ and not for the purpose

Texas.—Doll v. Mundine, 84 Tex. 315, 19 S. W. 394; Houy v. Gamel, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 123, 62 S. W. 76.

Missouri.—English v. Mullanphy, 1 Mo. 780.

New Mexico.—Kent v. Favor, 3 N. M. 218, 5 Pac. 470.

Texas.—Green v. Dunman, 35 Tex. 175.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 130 et seq.

Precise terms of statute.—The affidavit need not be in the precise terms of the statute, but where the spirit of the statute has been complied with, the same will be sufficient. Coombs v. Brenklander, 29 Nebr. 586, 45 N. W. 929; Belcher v. Skinner, 28 Nebr. 91, 44 N. W. 78; Payne v. Cox, 13 Tex. 480. But compare Turner v. Eustis, 8 Ark. 119, where it was held that an affidavit concluding with, "the application is not made for delay, but that the law may be administered," when the statute required the language to be "that justice may be done," was insufficient.

51. This is especially so under the Texas statute, where the allegations are essentially different according to the number of the continuances asked. See infra, XI, B.

Third continuance.—In Neeper v. Irons, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 180, it was held no error to refuse a third application for a continuance, where it did not state that the absent testimony could not be obtained from any other source, nor that the continuance was not sought for delay, as required by Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1278.

Where a witness duly summoned leaves the parish before trial, an affidavit for continuance on that account need not state that the affiant did not know he intended to depart, or could not prevent his departure, before trial, as provided by Code Proc. art. 465. Said article has reference to the case where a witness is in attendance at court under legal process and goes away without a party's knowledge. Klathenhoff v. Ardry, 14 La. 301.

52. Fiske v. Berryhill, 10 Iowa 203; Mason v. Anderson, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 293. On an application for the continuance of a cause the court cannot assume the existence of any fact necessary to authorize it when the applicant fails or is unwilling to set such fact forth in the application. Brown v. Abilene Nat. Bank, 70 Tex. 750, 8 S. W. 599.

53. State v. Eisenmeyer, 94 Ill. 96.

The facts are supposed to be within the peculiar knowledge of the affiant, and he is presumed to make statements as favorable to his case as the truth will warrant. State v. South Dakota.—Gaines v. White, 1 S. D. 434, 47 N. W. 524.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 139.

Failure to take depositions.—An application for a third continuance for the absence of the same witness who in each case failed to attend after being subpoenaed and promising to come, the applicant refusing to take of delay, and the continuance may be refused if the circumstances cast suspicion on the good faith of the application and induce the belief that it was intended only for delay.⁵⁷

d. Allegations Peculiar to Applications Based on Specified Grounds—

(i) ABSENCE OF COUNSEL. An affidavit for continuance based on the ground of absence of counsel should state all the facts which are by law made necessary to be shown before a continuance can be granted. It should state that the presence of such counsel is necessary to a fair trial, that the party expects to have his counsel in court at the time to which the continuance is taken, and, if the attorney is absent because of attendance on the legislature, that he is in actual attendance.⁵⁸

(ii) ABSENCE OF PARTIES. An affidavit for continuance on the ground of absence of parties must allege that his presence is indispensable to a fair trial of the cause, that the applicant may be prejudiced by failure to obtain a continuance, and that the continuance is not asked for on the mere ground of delay.⁵⁹

(iii) ABSENCE OF WITNESSES—(A) Statement of Facts Expected to Be Proved. In order that the court may judge of the materiality of the evidence sought to be introduced at the trial, or expected to be obtained, should the continuance be granted, the affidavit should set forth the substance of the testimony desired.⁶⁰ out an attachment for him, is properly overruled, the witness residing over one hundred miles from the court, and no attempt having been made to take his deposition. Davis v. Walker, 7 W. Va. 447.

Failure to take out attachment.—An application for a third continuance on the former affidavit, resworn to on the ground of the absence of the same witness, was properly overruled where it was alleged only that the applicant could not prove his cause of action so fully by any other witness as by the absent one, and at all the continuances the applicant refused to take out an attachment for the witness who was absent, although subpoenaed. Rodgers v. McLeary, 5 Ind. 236.

West Virginia.—Buster v. Holland, 27 W. Va. 510.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 140.

Right of inference.—Where there has been a continuance for the absence of material witnesses, the court has a right to infer that an application for a second continuance for the absence of other witnesses is for delay, where there has been in the interim no attempt to secure the testimony of the first witnesses and no mention made of their materiality. King v. Pearce, 40 Mo. 222.

Statement of facts required.—Where from the circumstances of the case it appears that the application is for delay only, the court may require the party to state the facts he expects to prove by the absent witness, and if they be such as not to affect the result the motion should be overruled. Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 676; Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253.

Under circumstances of suspicion, the court has discretionary power, in addition to the statutory causes, to require the applicant to negative any suspicious fact or circumstance disclosed on the face of the affidavit. Winter v. Bandel, 30 Ark. 362; Cushenberry v. McMurray, 27 Kan. 328.

Louisiana.—Lex v. Southern Express Co., 23 La. Ann. 59; Raby v. Brown, 14 La. 247.

It should state with directness and certainty what the witness will prove,⁶¹ and not mere conclusions or inferences⁶² that might be drawn from the combined testimony desired.⁶³ And when it fails to state a fact necessary to make the testimony of the absent witness relevant and material, the presumption is that the fact was not so and the continuance will be denied.⁶⁴ The affidavit should state the facts the absent witness will prove just as they would be stated by the witness in a deposition.⁶⁵

United States.—U. S. v. Schoonmaker, 93 Fed. 724.

Absence of papers.—The affidavit for a continuance on the ground of the absence of necessary papers should state the purport of such papers. Logan v. Farmers' Bank, 5 Harr. (Del.) 431; Hagerty v. Scott, 10 Tex. 525; Hyde v. Liverse, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,972, 1 Cranch C. C. 408.

Motion for attachment.—Where, a cause being called the last day of the term, defendant moves for attachments against his witnesses regularly summoned, but no return can be made until the following term, it is tantamount to a motion for a continuance; and he will be ruled to trial, unless he show what he expects to prove by the absent witnesses, as in ordinary cases of continuance. Raby v. Brown, 14 La. 247.

Contradiction of deposition.—A motion for a continuance, based upon the filing of a deposition, since the commencement of the term which the applicant expects to be able to contradict, must state the facts which the absent witness will testify to in contradiction to such deposition. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Heard, 44 Iowa 358.

Failure of magistrate to return depositions.—If a complainant moves for a continuance because the magistrate has not returned depositions taken on his part, and the witnesses had been formerly examined by him, his affidavit should disclose what facts if any were deposed to, not contained in former depositions. Rucker v. Howard, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 166.

Proof of set-off.—Where a defendant applies for a postponement on the ground of the absence of a material witness, who is to prove a set-off, the court will require the defendant to specify what parts of his account he means to prove by the witness, that it may appear whether such items can legally be set off; and if he will not so specify the plaintiff may proceed with the cause. Gibbes v. Mitchell, 2 Bay (S. C.) 351.

Statement of amount.—In an action against a railway company for burning grass, an affidavit for continuance by defendant, on the ground of absent witnesses, stating that they would prove the value of the grass to have been much less than plaintiff alleges, but not stating how much less, is insufficient. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Horne, 69 Tex. 643, 9 S. W. 440.

62. Deemer v. Falkenburg, 4 N. M. 57, 12 Pac. 717; Arnold v. Hockney, 51 Tex. 46. Thus an affidavit that states that the testimony "is material, proper, and competent," without setting out the particular facts, is insufficient. Bradshaw v. Stott, 7 App. Cas. (D. C.) 276. So an allegation that the defendant "would testify materially as stated in his answer" was held too indefinite. Crawford v. Lozano, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 538.

63. Mitchell v. Bean, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 142.

64. Dold v. Dold, 1 N. M. 397.

65. Clouston v. Gray, 48 Kan. 31, 28 Pac. 983; Payne v. Kansas City First Nat. Bank, 16 Kan. 147.

Affidavit by attorney.—An affidavit of an

(B) Probability of Production of Witness or Evidence. In addition to a showing as to the nature and character of the desired evidence, the application must further show some probability of producing the absent witness or testimony should the continuance be granted.⁶⁶ It is not enough to show that the residence of the witness cannot be ascertained,⁶⁷ or that he has removed beyond the jurisdiction of the particular tribunal in which the relief is sought.⁶⁸ The court is attorney as to the materiality of witnesses, in support of a motion for a commission to examine them, is sufficient, without stating "as advised by counsel." Beall v. Dey, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 513.

Arkansas practice.—In an affidavit for continuance for absence of witnesses, it was held sufficient under the Arkansas practice to state that the moving party expects to prove by the witnesses the facts in his affidavit. Burriss v. Wise, 2 Ark. 33.

The reason for requiring the statements of facts in the affidavit is to give the court an opportunity to judge of the materiality of the evidence (Glenn v. Brush, 3 Colo. 26; Ault v. Rawson, 14 Ill. 484; Bailey v. Hardy, 12 Ill. 459; Slater v. Breese, 36 Mich. 77; and see supra, IV, S. 6) and to give the opposite party the opportunity of admitting the matters desired to be proved and to go to trial without further delay (Glenn v. Brush, 3 Colo. 26; Ault v. Rawson, 14 Ill. 484; Olds v. Glaze, 7 Iowa 86; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Elliott, (Indian Terr. 1899) 51 S. W. 1067. And see infra, IX).

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 130 et seq.

Definite promise of production.—Where an affidavit for a continuance showed that some of the defendant's witnesses resided in another state, but exactly where the applicant had been unable to learn, and that he expected, if a continuance were granted, to learn their residence and procure their testimony at the next term, it was held that it should have been granted. Knowlton v. Smith, 17 Ind. 508.

Probability of recovery from sickness.—On a second application for continuance for the illness of the same party, the affidavit of attending physician or other person familiar with the circumstances should be exhibited, showing a probability of the recovery of the party, so that his deposition may be taken, and the grounds for such probability. Wilson v. King, 83 Ill. 232.

Under N. Y. Consol. Act, §§ 1362, 1364, relating to adjournments in district courts, and permitting adjournments for more than eight days on defendant's giving a bond, it is not error to refuse any adjournment to procure the attendance of a sick witness, where the party asks for eleven days, and shows that a shorter adjournment would be useless, and does not offer to give an undertaking. Simon v. Sheridan, etc., Co., 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 489, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 647.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 130 et seq.

Transient person.—There is no error in refusing a continuance asked on the ground of the absence of a witness, where he is shown to be a transient person without business or other ties in the state, and where defendant and his attorney admit that they have no knowledge of his whereabouts and have no reason to believe his attendance could be secured at any future time. Carberry v. Worrell, 68 Miss. 573, 9 So. 290.

68. Florida.—Livingston v. Cooper, 22 Fla. 292.

Iowa.—Brandt v. McDowell, 52 Iowa 230, 2 N. W. 1100.

Kansas.—Tucker v. Garner, 25 Kan. 454.

Wisconsin.—Lavery v. Crooke, 52 Wis. 612, 9 N. W. 599, 38 Am. Rep. 768.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 130 et seq.

It is not error to refuse a continuance to not bound to grant a continuance where it is altogether conjectural whether the absent witnesses are living, or if so where they reside, or when if at all their evidence can be procured.⁶⁹ There must be a direct allegation in the affidavit as to the probability of the future production of the witness or the evidence,⁷⁰ and it is the better practice to state at what time the evidence will be forthcoming,⁷¹ which time should under ordinary circumstances be stated as the next term of court.⁷²

(c) Probability That Witness Will Testify as Alleged. There must be some showing to the effect that the absent witness will testify as alleged,⁷³ but the procure the attendance of a non-resident witness, where the court has no power to compel his attendance, especially when it appears that the witness is an employee of the party asking for continuance, and the court has granted one continuance to allow the party to procure his attendance. Philadelphia F. Assoc. v. Hogwood, 82 Va. 342, 4 S. E. 617.

Return before execution of commission.—Where an important witness is out of the country, and will not return until several terms have elapsed, but will return before a commission would be of service, the superior court of the city of New York will put off a cause for a reasonable time, although the delay may be for more than one term. Smith v. New York Ins. Co., 1 Hall (N. Y.) 223.

69. Lowenstein v. Greve, 50 Minn. 383, 52 N. W. 964. An affidavit for continuance which states that a witness was "late of this state, and now out of the state, and will in all probability be back" is insufficient to warrant a continuance of the cause. Freligh v. Ames, 31 Mo. 253.

70. Arkansas.—Burriss v. Wise, 2 Ark. 33. Florida.—Harrell v. Durrance, 9 Fla. 490. Illinois.—Splane v. Byrne, 9 Ill. App. 392. Indiana.—Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Dickerson, 59 Ind. 317; Deming v. Patterson, 10 Ind. 251.

Kansas.—Bliss v. Carlson, 17 Kan. 325. Kentucky.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Rogers, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 726.

Louisiana.—An affidavit that a witness "has left the city for a few days" is equivalent to an allegation that he is expected to return after that period, and so is sufficient. Harrison v. Waymouth, 3 Rob. 340.

Missouri.—Freligh v. Ames, 31 Mo. 253. Nebraska.—Rowland v. Shephard, 27 Nebr. 494, 43 N. W. 344.

Texas.—Franks v. Williams, 37 Tex. 24; Stachely v. Peirce, 28 Tex. 328; Byne v. Jackson, 25 Tex. 95; Hunter v. Waite, 11 Tex. 85.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 135. 71. Deming v. Patterson, 10 Ind. 251; Borron v. Mertens, 14 La. Ann. 306; Barker v. Patchin, 56 Mo. 241.

Reasonable time.—A party is not entitled to an adjournment on account of the absence of a witness, unless it is shown that the attendance of the witness can be procured within a reasonable time. Brown v. Moran, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 349.

Time asked for.—An affidavit for continuance must show by the facts stated that there is a reasonable probability that the evidence of the absent witness can be procured by the time to which the continuance is asked. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Dickerson, 59 Ind. 317.

Time of return of witness.—Where affidavits for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a material witness, a party interested, stated that he was suffering from nervous prostration and was advised to take a trip to Europe, and that he was not physically able before starting to stand a cross-examination; but such affidavits were vague and uncertain as to the length of time that he had been sick, and nothing was stated as to the time he would return, it was held that the continuance was properly refused. Mantonya v. Hueter, 35 Ill. App. 27.

72. Arkansas.—Burriss v. Wise, 2 Ark. 33. Illinois.—Eames v. Hennessy, 22 Ill. 628; Splane v. Byrne, 9 Ill. App. 392.

Indiana.—Nixon v. Brown, 3 Blackf. 504. Nebraska.—McCall v. Peter, 31 Nebr. 528, 48 N. W. 267; Johnson v. Mills, 31 Nebr. 524, 48 N. W. 266.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 135.

Indefinite statements.—Where the affidavit showed that the absent witness had been absent in a western territory over a year, that his exact whereabouts was unknown, and that numerous inquiries had failed to discover him, and, while it is stated that his testimony is expected at the next term, there are no facts alleged from which the court can see that there is any probability thereof, the continuance is properly refused. Bliss v. Carlson, 17 Kan. 325.

73. Lansky v. West End St. R. Co., 173 Mass. 20, 53 N. E. 129; Macdonnell v. De los Fuentes, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 136, 26 S. W. 792.

Doubt as to securing testimony.—There is no error in refusing a third continuance for the purpose of obtaining testimony which the witness relied upon cannot be compelled to give, and which he would not be likely to give voluntarily, because it would criminate himself, it appearing from the affidavit that such witness probably absconded from the state to avoid a subpoena in the action and is still absent. Lavery v. Crooke, 52 Wis. 612, 9 N. W. 599, 38 Am. Rep. 768.

Statements of third parties.—Under Mass. Super. Ct. Rule No. 34, providing that no motion for continuance for want of material testimony will be granted, unless supported by an affidavit stating the name of the witness whose testimony is wanted, and the testishowing thus required is nothing more than a probability which must be considered by the court in connection with the circumstances of the case as presented.⁷⁴

(D) Materiality of Evidence. The affidavit must allege the materiality of the evidence expected to be proved.⁷⁵

(E) Applicant's Belief That Matters Intended to Be Shown Are True. In some jurisdictions it is held that the applicant must state in his affidavit that the facts he expects to prove by the absent witness are true, and that an affidavit which does not contain an allegation to this effect is fatally defective.⁷⁶

(F) Absence of Other Witnesses or Evidence to the Same Facts. There must be a further showing in the affidavit that there are no other witnesses or evidence by which the material facts in the case can be proved,⁷⁷ and there should be a direct allegation in the affidavit to that effect;⁷⁸ but it has been held in some cases

mony he is expected to give, with the grounds of such expectation, an affidavit of a party's attorney that he believed a certain witness if present would give certain material testimony, and that his belief was founded on the statement of a third person, to whom the absent witness had made his statement, is sufficient, without the affidavit of such third person, or the absence thereof being accounted for. Lansky v. West End St. R. Co., 173 Mass. 20, 53 N. E. 129.

74. The right of a defendant to a continuance for the absence of a material witness is not impaired by the fact that plaintiff had talked to the witness, and that the witness told him that he did not know anything about the case. Waldrup v. Maxwell, 84 Ga. 113, 10 S. E. 597.

Application embracing more than one witness.—The fact that an application for a continuance to obtain the testimony of an absent witness, which is shown to be material, embraced another witness, by whom the applicant stated he expected to prove the same facts, which witness was present and testified on the trial, but who failed to testify to the facts expected, does not warrant the assumption that the facts could not be proved by the absent witness, and does not justify the refusal of the continuance. Jordan v. Jordan, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 830.

75. Lomax v. Holbine, (Nebr. 1902) 90 N. W. 1112; Weston v. Proctor, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 800, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 950. See also Hibbets v. Hibbets, 117 Iowa 177, 90 N. W. 613, holding that an affidavit in support of a motion for a continuance on the ground of sickness of the movant, stating merely that he was unable to attend the trial, but not showing that he intended to be a witness or that his presence was otherwise necessary, was insufficient to justify the court in granting a continuance.

76. Fausett v. Voss, 12 Ind. 525; Gaines v. White, 1 S. D. 424, 47 N. W. 524.

Affidavit held insufficient.—An affidavit in support of a motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a material witness, which stated that affiant would prove a certain fact "which is true," but did not state that affiant believed the facts to be true which the absent witness would prove, is defective. Helfrich Saw, etc., Mill Co. v. Everly, 32 S. W. 750, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 795.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 136.

Documentary evidence.—Where a party asks a continuance for the purpose of procuring certain papers for evidence, but does not show that the evidence therein contained cannot be procured some other way, he does not entitle himself to a continuance. Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (Tex. Sup. 1887) 5 S. W. 503.

Evidence contained in record.—A continuance to procure the testimony of absent witnesses should be refused when there is record evidence of the facts thus sought to be proved. Reynolds v. Martin, 55 Ga. 628.

Evidence partly applicable.—An application for a continuance on the ground of the want of a material witness is properly refused where the applicant is unable to state that as to one part of the case the witness would be qualified to testify, and there was, independent of him, proof available as to the other part. Penoyer v. Phillips, 10 N. Y. St. 783.

Foreign witness.—In Ten Broeck v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 6 N. Y. St. 100, it was held no abuse of discretion to deny an adjournment of a cause on the ground of absence of a foreign witness, where the facts proposed to be proved by him can be abundantly established by other witnesses residing within the jurisdiction.

78. California.—Pope v. Dalton, 31 Cal. 218; Pierce v. Payne, 14 Cal. 419.

that the mere fact that a party has other witnesses who can prove the same circumstances ought not to deprive him of a continuance where the absent witness might have the means of speaking more positively.⁷⁹

(g) Name and Residence of Absent Witness. In some jurisdictions the names of the absent witnesses are required to be stated in the application, and this is always the better practice,⁸⁰ unless there be circumstances to show that the party, without any fault of his own, was unable to learn the names of such witnesses.⁸¹ The affidavit should also state the residence of the witness,⁸² either positively or by way of fair inference.⁸³

(h) Want of Consent of Applicant to Witness' Absence. An affidavit for continuance on the ground of an absent witness need not state that the witness was not absent by the consent or procurement of the party applying for the continuance.⁸⁴

(i) Diligence in Attempting to Procure Evidence. Every application for a continuance must, by express allegations, show that diligence has been used to procure the absent testimony⁸⁵ or some excuse for that want of diligence which Expectation of proof.—It is not sufficient to state that he has no other witnesses by whom he expects to prove the same facts. Pope v. Dalton, 31 Cal. 218.

Witnesses in attendance.—A statement in an affidavit that there are no other witnesses in attendance by whom the applicant can prove the facts expected to be proved by the absent witness is not sufficient, as the continuance will not be granted unless there are no other witnesses either in attendance or elsewhere. Bartholow v. Campbell, 56 Mo. 117; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780.

Witnesses in the state.—So an application which states that the applicant knows of no witness in the state by whom the material facts can be proved is insufficient, as it should show that he does know of any witness by whom such facts can be proved. Thompson v. Lord, 14 Iowa 591.

79. Hewlett v. Henderson, 9 Rob. (La.) 379; Harrison v. Waymouth, 3 Rob. (La.) 340. In Epsy v. State Bank, 5 Ind. 274, the defendant in a suit brought by a bank applied for a continuance, that he might obtain the testimony of an absent witness, not an officer of the bank, that part of the demand had been paid. It was held that it was not a sufficient objection to the application that if the payment had been made it would be known by the officers of the bank, and that they might be called.

Contra.—Higgs v. Hough, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,472, 3 Cranch 142.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 133.

Discretion of court.—A failure by an applicant for a continuance for want of testimony to state, under the provisions of Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1277, "that he has used due diligence to procure the same, stating such diligence," leaves the matter of continuance to the discretion of the court. St. Louis, etc., Co. v. Woolum, 84 Tex. 570, 19 S. W. 782.

Information and belief.—An affidavit for the continuance of a cause on the ground of the absence of a witness, in which the affiant speaks only from information and belief, and which does not show what steps have been taken to ascertain the whereabouts of such witness, is not sufficient. McKinley v. Shank, 24 Ind. 258.

When diligence began.—An affidavit in support of a motion for continuance does not make a sufficient showing as to diligence, in stating that the movant has made diligent efforts to ascertain the names of the witnesses, where it fails to show when the diligence began, or that he caused search to be reasonable notice of the time of trial by the service of a subpoena,⁸⁸ and the date of such service should be given in order that the court may judge of the diligence employed.⁸⁹

4. AMENDMENT OF AFFIDAVITS. The decisions respecting amendments of affidavits for continuances are not altogether harmonious. Some decisions hold that after the court has passed on an application for a continuance, the affidavit in support of the application cannot be amended;⁹⁰ in other decisions it is held that it is not error to refuse to permit such amendment,⁹¹ and that the discretion of the court in refusing to permit an amendment is not subject to revision.⁹² In one case it was held that it was discretionary with the court whether to permit an amendment by way of explanation, but that no new facts could be inserted.⁹³ Oral explanations of an affidavit should always be denied.⁹⁴

5. SUPPLEMENTAL OR ADDITIONAL AFFIDAVITS. According to some decisions supplemental affidavits will in no event be received on a motion for continuance,⁹⁵ and others hold that the decision of the court in overruling an application for leave to file further and additional affidavits in support of a motion for continuance is not reviewable.⁹⁶ So some decisions hold that a second application based on the same state of facts is not permissible, since this would in effect allow an affidavit for a continuance to be amended.⁹⁷ Again it has been held that the refusal of such an application is proper; that it would be a dangerous practice to permit an application for a continuance to be repeated upon a new affidavit upon the same state of facts.⁹⁸

Date of subpoena.—In an application for continuance on the ground of absent witnesses, the date of the subpoena issued for him should be shown, so as to enable the appellate court to determine the correctness of the ruling, which depends on whether due diligence was shown in attempting to procure his attendance. Gulf, etc., Co. v. Flake, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 253.

It is not sufficient to show that a subpoena was issued a day or two before the trial, unless it is also shown that the witness resides in the county or that the subpoena was served. Ellis v. Wiley, 17 Tex. 134.

Goodwin*, 78 Ill. 127 (where the court said that the amendment of an affidavit for a continuance had never been permitted by any court of which it had knowledge).

91. Pence v. Christman, 15 Ind. 257; Widner v. Hunt, 4 Iowa 355.

The practice of suffering affidavits for continuance to be amended or a new affidavit to be filed, when the first has not made out the case desired to be shown by the party, is one which may be productive of much evil, and which the court should permit with great caution. It is within the discretion of the trial court to refuse leave to amend an affidavit for continuance adjudged insufficient, or leave to file a new affidavit, unless for the purpose of presenting facts which have transpired or come to the knowledge of the party since the filing of the first. Widner v. Hunt, 4 Iowa 355.

In this latter case a second affidavit for a continuance at the same term for the same general reason: namely, the absence of witnesses—the first having been overruled—but held bad because it did not show a reasonable excuse for the failure to embrace all the reasons for the continuance in the first application.

"Affidavits filed subsequent to the ruling and trial can not be considered, for the question is, was the ruling right upon the affidavits presented to the court prior to the trial? Affidavits filed after the trial might, perhaps, be useful and influential upon a motion for a new trial or the like, but they certainly can not be given such a retrospective

VI. THE HEARING.

A. In General. Every application for a continuance should be heard by the court and determined according to its circumstances.⁹⁹ While it is the duty of the court to prevent unnecessary delay in the trial of causes, yet it should not prejudice the substantial rights of parties by forcing them to trial when they cannot reasonably be expected to do full and complete justice to their case.¹ It has been held not reversible error for the court to consult the convenience of jurors on an application for an adjournment for illness of counsel, where the court assumed the responsibility of deciding the motion.²

B. Discretion of Court. According to the great weight of authority, the granting or refusing of a motion for continuance is in the sound discretion of the court.³ It is only in cases where there has been a very capricious exercise of effect as to make an antecedent ruling erroneous." McBride v. Stradley, 103 Ind. 465, 467, 2 N. E. 358.

99. Roberts v. Moore, 27 Ga. 411.

Possible existence of facts.—Where a party makes out a good prima facie case for a continuance on account of the absence of a material witness, the court is not justified in refusing the continuance because it may imagine the possible existence of facts which if shown would have been sufficient in avoidance of the case made by the party moving. Beatty v. Sylvester, 3 Nev. 228.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 142 et seq.

Diligence not positively determined.—When the applicant's diligence cannot be positively determined, the court should rather grant the continuance. Its allowance produces delay, but its denial may cause irreparable injury. Lee v. Andrews, 10 Mart. (La.) 682; Leclesne v. Cottin, 9 Mart. (La.) 454.

Frequency of terms.—In a probate court sitting monthly a continuance should be granted more readily than in a district court sitting semiannually. Kimball v. Dunn, 12 La. 445.

5. In Illinois, where the affidavit for continuance is in strict compliance with the statute, the court is bound to grant a continuance and can exercise no discretion in the matter. Chicago Public Stock Exch. v. McLaughry, 148 Ill. 372, 36 N. E. 88; Wicker v. Boynton, 83 Ill. 545; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Teters, 68 Ill. 144.

In Mississippi it has been held that a continuance of a cause under the statute regulating the practice in circuit courts to the term after the party defendant is brought into court is a matter of right which he may demand. The court has no discretion to refuse a continuance. Maury v. Commercial Bank, 5 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 41.

In Texas it has been repeatedly held when on a first or second application for a continuance, the affidavit is in strict compliance with the statute, the court has no discretion in the matter but must continue the cause. Doll v. Mundine, 84 Tex. 315, 19 S. W. 394; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Hall, 83 Tex. 675, 19 S. W. 121; Cleveland v. Cole, 65 Tex. 402; Price v. Lauve, 49 Tex. 74; Chilson v. Where the affidavit does not follow the statute, as when it does not show diligence, but alleges an excuse for not using it, or where some other equitable consideration not embraced in the terms of the statute is relied on, then the application is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, to be granted or not, according to the intrinsic merit of the application. Cannot deny materiality of evidence.—After an affidavit in support of a motion for the continuance of a cause on the ground of the absence of the material witness has been made, the opposite party may make a counter-affidavit stating any circumstances that render it impossible that the evidence of the witness can be obtained within a reasonable time, but such counter-affidavit should not deny the materiality of the evidence. Anonymous, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 434, 3 Day (Conn.) 308, Brunn. Col. Cas. 74.

7. Maher v. Pulley, 8 La. 89; Ogden v. Payne, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 15; Bryce v. Jones, 38 Tex. 205 [following Hyde v. State, 16 Tex. 445, 67 Am. Dec. 680].

statements of the witness made in writing are admitted as his evidence, if present, it is competent to contradict them by an affidavit made by such witness at another time and place, when at the time of the hearing on the motion for continuance opposing counsel went to trial with the understanding that he could contradict the statement after stating that he would do so in that way.⁸ Since the decision of the question of continuances is much within the discretion of the trial court, such court in passing upon the motion is not always confined entirely to the statements made in the affidavit;⁹ it may, when occasion requires, insist upon other evidence in addition to the affidavit,¹⁰ or inquire into the pleadings on file to see if a postponement is really in the interest of justice.¹¹ It may also take into consideration facts which are within its judicial knowledge concerning the condition of the country and the means of communication, in determining whether due diligence has been used in procuring absent testimony.¹² Although as above stated counter-affidavits and evidence cannot as a general rule be received, yet where such evidence has been received, it is not error that will constitute ground for a reversal, where independent of the evidence adduced the application should have been denied,¹³ or where it appears that the court took no action upon it.¹⁴

VII. THE ORDER.

A. Entry. There is no absolute necessity that an order of continuance be entered in the cause;¹⁵ a cause undisposed of will go to the succeeding term, although no formal order of continuance is entered;¹⁶ and it has been held that

8. Hutmacher v. Charleston Consol. R., etc., Co., 63 S. C. 123, 40 S. E. 1029.

9. Black v. Appolonio, 1 Mont. 342.

Oral statements of counsel in opposition to a motion for continuance, if not objected to by the applicant for not being in the form of an affidavit, should be considered as evidence in determining the question of continuance. Tribune Assoc. v. Smith, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 251.

10. Cushenberry v. McMurray, 27 Kan. 328.

Examination under oath.—A party seeking a continuance upon the ground of a material witness should state in his affidavit, fully and frankly, if he knows them, all the material facts which the witness will prove—as well those which are unfavorable as those which are in his favor; and if the court suspect that this has not been done the party should be examined under oath touching the matter. Dean v. Turner, 31 Md. 52. So the court may examine a party as to what he expects to prove by the absent witness. Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 676; Harris v. Harris, 2 Leigh (Va.) 584; Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253.

11. Douglass v. Neil, 37 Tex. 528.

Depositions on file.—The court in considering a motion may hear depositions on file to enable him to determine the materiality of the absent evidence. Walt v. Walsh, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 314.

12. Black v. Appolonio, 1 Mont. 342; Park v. Larkin, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 17. To a bill of exceptions to the refusal of a continuance on account of the absence of a witness, the judge appended a statement that witness was a merchant in business within six blocks of the court-house, and that his presence could have been had, if desired by the party, that it appeared on the trial that he could not have had any knowledge of the subject-matter at the time the cause of action arose, and that the motion for a new trial sets forth no facts that could have been proven by the witness. Under such circumstances it was held that this did not show any reason to deprive the party of the privilege of having him into court, nor that his attendance could have been procured at the trial, and the refusal of the continuance was erroneous. Corsicana v. Kerr, 75 Tex. 207, 12 S. W. 982.

13. Quincy Whig Co. v. Tillson, 67 Ill. 351; Warrich v. Winter, 33 Ill. App. 36.

14. Wick v. Weber, 64 Ill. 167.

15. Horn v. Excelsior Springs Co., 52 Mo. App. 548; Johnston v. Ditty, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 85. And see State v. Moore, 57 Mo. App. 662.

Holding a cause under advisement beyond the term is a continuance without a formal order to that effect. Mayor v. Yocum, 15 Mo. App. 579.

The entry that referees are summoned for a particular day is a sufficient entry of the adjournment of the cause to that day, it appearing that the defendant had notice. Jeans v. Du Pont, 2 Harr. (Del.) 313.

16. The Milwaukie v. Hale, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 306; Horn v. Excelsior Springs Co., 52 Mo. App. 548; Johnston v. Ditty, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 85.

Effect of filing pleadings.—The fact that an affidavit for a continuance appears of record to have been filed does not, in the absence of an entry to that effect, show that the cause has been once continued on affidavit. Prewitt v. Everett, 10 Tex. 283. So an order that a motion for a continuance on the ground that an amended answer has been denied after service of the notice of trial be denied, and a continuance relating back may be entered in a cause any time to effect the purpose of justice.¹⁷

B. Operation and Effect. The order of continuance is in effect a postponement of the cause until the next term,¹⁸ unless there is some special matter in the order that gives it a particular significance.¹⁹

C. Setting Aside Order. A cause of action is considered in fieri, even though an order of continuance may have been entered during the term,²⁰ and such continuance may be subsequently set aside if the court is satisfied that no injustice will result to either of the parties.²¹ An order of continuance, however, having been once granted, the court is not warranted in setting the same aside without strong reasons,²² and notice should in all cases be served on the declaring that the amended answer "is not properly a part of the record herein," does not have the effect of striking out such answer. Whitefoot v. Leffingwell, 90 Wis. 182, 63 N. W. 82.

17. Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. (U. S.) 260, 12 L. ed. 430.

Entered nunc pro tunc.—Where a motion made, but not decided, was not continued to the next term, a continuance should be entered nunc pro tunc, but the opponent will not be required to take it up at that term. Hurd v. Williams, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,918, 4 McLean 239.

18. Innerarity v. Frowner, 2 Ala. 150; Butler v. McMillen, 13 Kan. 385; Sawyer v. Bryson, 10 Kan. 199; Messenger v. Broom, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 630.

Pro forma ruling.—A ruling continuing a cause to another term for a final submission is only pro forma, and does not conclude any motion in the cause. Green v. Ronen, 62 Iowa 99, 17 N. W. 180.

Vacation of judgment.—When a motion is made to set aside a default and vacate a judgment at the term at which the judgment is rendered, and is continued until the next term, the court has power at such next term to vacate the judgment. Hibbard v. Mueller, 86 Ill. 256; Windett v. Hamilton, 52 Ill. 180.

19. Where a jury is impeached and sworn, and an order is made continuing the cause a day in the term, the jury should be considered as discharged, and it is error to force a trial before that jury. Lyons v. Hamilton, 69 Iowa 47, 28 N. W. 429.

20. Saunders v. Coffin, 16 Ala. 421; Papin v. Buckingham, 33 Mo. 454. In Stephen Pl. p. 155, § 77, in treating of proceedings in an action, the learned author says: "Under the ancient law there were continuances, i. e., adjournments of the proceedings for certain purposes, from one day or one term to another; and in such cases there was an entry made on the record expressing the ground of the adjournment, and appointing the parties to reappear at the given day. In the intervals between such continuances and the day appointed, the parties were of course out of court, and consequently not in a situation to plead. But it sometimes happened that after a plea had been pleaded, and while the parties were out of court, in consequence of such a continuance, a new matter of defense arose, which did not exist, and which the defendant had consequently no opportunity to plead, before the last continuance. This new defense he was therefore entitled at the day given for his re-appearance to plead as a matter that had happened after the last continuance — (puis darreign continuance — post ultimam continuationem). In the same cases as occasioned a continuance in the ancient law, but in no other, a continuance still takes place. At the time, indeed, when the pleadings are filed and delivered, no record exists, and there is therefore no entry at that time made on record of the award of a continuance; but the parties are from the day when, by the ancient practice, a continuance would have been entered, supposed to be out of court, and the pleading is suspended till the day arrives to which, by the ancient practice, the continuance would extend. And that day the defendant is entitled, if any new matter of defense has arisen in the interval, to plead it according to the ancient plan, puis darreign continuance."

21. Saunders v. Coffin, 16 Ala. 421; Amory v. Reilly, 9 Ind. 490.

Judgment by default.—After a case has been continued by the court upon an answer to the merits filed by leave, it is improper to set aside the order of continuance, strike out the answer, and enter a default judgment (Taff v. Westerman, 39 Mo. 413); so it is error to enter judgment by default in a case in which both parties have been in attendance with their witnesses, and after all litigated causes have been continued (Crouch v. Mullinix, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 478).

Sickness in family.—The setting aside of a continuance granted on account of sickness in the family of one of the counsel for one of the parties is not an abuse of discretion, where it appears that ample time was given such party to prepare for trial after the continuance was set aside, and that the counsel on whose account it was granted appeared and assisted at the trial of the case. Barner v. Bayless, 134 Ind. 600, 33 N. E. 907, 34 N. E. 502.

22. Marsh v. Morse, 18 Mo. 477.

Consent of counsel.—Where a continuance is granted at the instance of one party, on an understanding by the court, from the statement of the counsel of such party, that the counsel of the opposite party consented thereto, it is not error to set aside the continuance on the motion of such opposite adverse party.²³ A party may in effect, however, cancel an order of continuance by appearing and proceeding to trial during the term,²⁴ or acquiesce in its vacation by demurring and pleading the general issue after the order has been set aside.²⁵

VIII. CONDITIONS IMPOSED ON GRANTING CONTINUANCE.

A. In General. The court may in its discretion, where the justice of the case so demands, impose terms or conditions upon the granting of a continuance.²⁶ Thus it may require that the applicant give security for carrying out the judgment or decree rendered,²⁷ that the adverse party be allowed to take depositions of a witness for which the court is without authority to issue a commission,²⁸ that the death of the applicant (whose health is in a precarious condition) before the term to which the cause is continued shall not abate the suit,²⁹ that the applicant give bail in the action,³⁰ that the applicant confess judgment for a sum admitted to be due,³¹ that the opposite party be allowed to take depositions without making a preliminary affidavit,³² that a deposition may be read, although informally taken,³³ or that a rule be granted to try the cause at the next term or the applicant suffer a non prosequitur.³⁴

B. Payment of Costs.³⁵ It is a usual condition imposed upon the applicant that he shall pay costs where a continuance is granted in his favor.³⁶ In many party, on denial by his counsel that he consented thereto, etc.; and this, although the latter counsel was present when the court was induced to grant such a continuance, in the absence of any showing that he heard the statement and made no objection to it. Hunt v. Listenberger, 14 Ind. App. 320, 42 N. E. 240, 964.

Mistake.—A court may set aside a continuance entered by mistake at any time during the term of entry. Ralston v. Lothain, 18 Ind. 303.

jurisdictions the matter of imposing costs as a condition of granting a continuance is by special statutory provision made discretionary with the court.⁸⁷ The court has no power to make a direct order for the payment of costs, but can only impose their payment as a condition of granting the application.⁸⁸

C. Effect of Conditions and Non-Compliance Therewith. By accepting a continuance, the party accepts the terms or conditions imposed by the court on granting the continuance;⁸⁹ and this is so, although the continuance is in fact Jury summoned by adverse party.—A defendant who puts off a cause on affidavit is not held to pay the costs of striking a jury that has been summoned on a rule of the plaintiff. Kennedy v. Nixon, 6 N. J. L. 159.

Quasi-criminal action.—A suit to recover a penalty for violation of a city ordinance, being quasi-criminal in its nature, it is error for the trial court to require payment of costs as the terms of granting a continuance in such suit. Boscobel v. Bugbee, 41 Wis. 59.

Under the English practice it seems to be the rule that the applicant should offer to pay the costs of the adjournment. Waller v. Joy, 4 D. & L. 338, 16 L. J. Exch. 17, 16 M. & W. 60; Ward v. Ducker, 5 M. & G. 377, 6 Scott N. R. 45, 44 E. C. L. 203. So in Lydall v. Martinson, 5 Ch. D. 780, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 69, 25 Wkly. Rep. 866, it was held that where the hearing of an action was adjourned in order to allow parties to be added, the applicant must pay all the costs incurred by the action, and not merely a fixed sum for costs of the day.

38. Bagley v. Ostrom, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 516.

Election of payment.—If an action is continued on terms and the order is that plaintiff pay the sum fixed on as terms or be nonsuited or defaulted at the next term, the party may elect to pay the terms imposed or submit to the nonsuit or default. Murray v. Emmons, 26 N. H. 523.

Presumption as to costs.—Under Wash. Code Proc. § 832, empowering the court to enforce, as a condition for granting a continuance, the payment of ten dollars to the adverse party, besides witness fees, it was held that when the court requires the payment of twenty-five dollars as such condition no presumption obtains that the excess over ten dollars was made up of witness' fees, in the face of a request of the applicant to the adverse party to show the costs incurred, and there being an entire absence of any showing in the record as to what the costs were. Tacoma Nat. Bank v. Peet, 9 Wash. 222, 37 Pac. 426.

39. Humes v. O'Bryan, 74 Ala. 64; Rhea v. Tucker, 56 Ala. 450; Dunlap v. Horton, 49 Ala. 412; Waller v. Sultzbacher, 38 Ala. 318; Brown v. Warren, 17 Nev. 417, 30 Pac. 1078; Spanghel v. Spanghel, 39 N. Y. App. Div. 5, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 7; Booth v. Whitby, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 446.

Rule applied.—Thus a party applying for a continuance by accepting the same accepts conditions imposed by the order that payment within a certain time shall be a condition precedent to his further defense of the suit (Rhea v. Tucker, 56 Ala. 450) or that his pleading or answer be stricken from the file and judgment given his adversary (Waller v. Sultzbacher, 38 Ala. 318; Brown v. Warren, 17 Nev. 417, 30 Pac. 1078; Booth v. Whitby, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 446). Compare Dunlap v. Horton, 49 Ala. 412, holding that when a continuance is granted on the application of the defendant, on condition that if the costs are not paid within a certain time judgment shall go against him, his acceptance of the terms makes a valid agreement of record, but that the court is not bound to enforce it and cannot impose such terms at the trial without the defendant's consent.

If a continuance is granted "on payment of costs" the opposite party may insist on having the trial proceed on failure to pay the unnecessary,⁴⁰ or although some of the costs imposed as a condition of the continuance are improper.⁴¹

IX. ADMISSIONS TO PREVENT CONTINUANCE.

A. In General. Where the adverse party will admit the evidence or facts for the production of which the continuance is asked a postponement of the cause will ordinarily be denied by the court;⁴² and where injustice is likely to costs, or he may waive this right and either compel payment by precept or include them in his general bill in case he is ultimately successful in the action. Gamble v. Taylor, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 375. If the order imposes payment of costs within a specified time, on granting a continuance, without providing that the cause shall be stricken from the docket on non-compliance with the order, failure to pay the costs within the time limited will not authorize the court to strike the cause from the docket. Ex p. Abrams, 48 Ala. 151. If the court have imposed payment of costs as a condition of granting a continuance, but have not required immediate payment, the party upon whom the condition was imposed has a right to appear and defend at the trial, notwithstanding his failure to make payment. *Tacoma Nat. Affidavit read as deposition.—A second continuance for the absence of a witness is properly refused where the affidavit of what the witness would testify to is read as his deposition. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hoskins, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 238. So in Gaines v. Wilson, (Va. 1896) 24 S. E. 828, it was held that where on the hearing the affidavit of the applicant and a witness that he wished to introduce were allowed in evidence, the continuance was properly denied.

Evidence given at former trial.—In Conrad v. Dobmeier, 64 Minn. 284, 67 N. W. 5, it was held no error to refuse a continuance for defendant's enforced absence from a second trial of the cause, where defendant's attorneys had tried the cause before, and plaintiff's attorneys agreed to let defendant's evidence given at the former trial be read and considered as actually given.

Illness of material witness.—The affidavit of defendant that he is sick and unable to attend court as a witness on the day of trial is not good cause for a continuance of the case, if it is admitted by the opposite party result from delay, the court may require a party to disclose what he expects to prove, in order that the other party may admit it if he so desires.⁴³ Provisions for making admissions to prevent the continuance of a cause are usually made by statute⁴⁴ or rule of court.⁴⁵ Some of these statutes are mandatory in their terms and prohibit a continuance where the facts are admitted,⁴⁶ while others make it discretionary with the court whether or not a continuance shall be refused.⁴⁷

B. Sufficiency of Admissions. The character of admissions necessary to be made in order to prevent a continuance varies in the different jurisdictions, because of the difference in the wording of the statutes regulating the subject.⁴⁸ In some jurisdictions an admission that the witness if present would testify as alleged is sufficient;⁴⁹ while in others the material facts must be admitted as true without reserve, it not being enough for the adverse party to admit that the witness if present would swear to the facts to be proved.⁵⁰ The terms of the

that he would as a witness if present swear to what he had set forth in his affidavit. Pruyn v. Gibbens, 24 La. Ann. 231. See also Kitchens v. Hutchins, 44 Ga. 620. And this rule holds good although the applicant alleges in his affidavit that, being the witness, it was necessary for him to be present for the purpose of conferring with his counsel and assisting in the trial of the cause. *Pate v. 49. In Larrat v. Carlier, 1 Mart. (La.) 144, it was stated that when a party prays for a continuance on account of the absence of witness, the adverse party may require him to disclose what facts he intends to prove by such witness; and if such party admit those facts the trial shall proceed.

The Illinois statute declares the effect of admitting in evidence by the opposite party an affidavit for a continuance on account of the absence of testimony, as follows: "The party admitting such affidavits shall be held to admit only, that if the absent witness was present, he would swear to the fact or facts which the affidavit states he will swear to, and such fact or facts shall have no greater force or effect than if such absent witness was present and swore to the same in open court, leaving it to the party admitting such affidavit to controvert the statements contained therein, the same as if such witness was present and examined in open court." Uteley v. Burns, 70 Ill. 162.

Under the Indiana statute it is sufficient to admit that a party or witness would testify to the facts stated in the application, and consent that it may be used in evidence at the trial. Pate v. Tait, 72 Ind. 450. See also Dawson v. Hemphill, 50 Ind. 422.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Continuance," § 114.

Admission in writing.—To avoid the continuance of a case for the purpose of procuring testimony upon a proper showing made therefor, under the Ga. Code, § 3472, the opposite party must admit in writing the facts expected to be proved, and agree that he does not contest the truth thereof. Klugman v. Gammell, 43 Ga. 581; Cheney v. Smith, 42 Ga. 50.

admission must substantially comply with the provisions of the statute itself,⁵¹ and the admission must be broad enough to cover the evidence to obtain which the continuance is asked.⁵²

C. Effect of Admissions. Where a party admits the facts as stated in the affidavit to be true he will be precluded from contesting them when the affidavit is read in evidence,⁵³ and although his adversary fails to object to evidence contradictory thereof, he does not lose the benefit of the admission.⁵⁴ But where the admission is only that the witness if present would testify as alleged, there is no admission that such facts are absolutely true⁵⁵ or that the witness is competent and

Admission not changing results.—Where the evidence of an absent witness, for whose production a continuance is applied for, if admitted as true could not change the result, it is harmless error to refuse a continuance upon the admission only by the opposing party that the witness would have testified to the facts stated in the application. Maughmer v. Bering, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 299, 46 S. W. 917.

Admission withdrawn.—An agreement intended to be used as an admission in the absence of a witness may if in evidence be withdrawn by the court, without allowing any continuance, where the witness is present, and the opportunity is offered to prove the facts recited in the agreement by the witness. Robbins v. Ginnocchio, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 34.

Reason of rule.—The right of a party to bring his witnesses before the jury is a legal right, which may be of essential advantage to him, especially in the establishment of controverted facts, of which he ought not to be deprived. If therefore entitled to a continuance in such a case, he ought not to be deprived of it by any admission short of the admission of the fact intended to be proved by his absent witnesses. Smith v. Creason, 5 Dana (Ky.) 298, 30 Am. Dec. 688. See also Murphy v. Murphy, 31 Mo. 322.

51. Klugman v. Gammell, 43 Ga. 581; Cheney v. Smith, 42 Ga. 50; Dawson v. Hemphill, 50 Ind. 422; Nave v. Horton, 9 Ind. 563; Murphy v. Murphy, 31 Mo. 322.

52. Peek v. Lovett, 41 Cal. 521.

Intimate knowledge of witness.—It is error to refuse a defendant a continuance on the ground of the absence of a material witness, although the plaintiff admits that the witness would testify to all the facts set forth in the affidavit for continuance, where the affidavit shows that the witness had an intimate knowledge of the transactions between the parties giving rise to the action, and carried on all correspondence between them, and that her presence is important for a just and fair trial of the case. Hopkinson v. Jones, 28 Ill. App. 409.

53. Klugman v. Gammell, 43 Ga. 581; Cheney v. Smith, 42 Ga. 50; Fulton County v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 21 Ill. 388; Bryan v. Coursey, 3 Md. 61; Brent v. Heard, 40 Miss. 370.

Admission limited in time.—Mo. Rev. Stat. (1889), § 2127, provided that if the opposite party will admit what an absent witness would swear to as set out in an affidavit, the cause shall not be continued, but the party moving therefor shall read such affidavit as evidence of the absent witness. On defendant's application for a continuance, plaintiff admitted the testimony of an absent witness as set forth in defendant's affidavit, and afterward the court for other reasons continued the case on its own motion for one month and four days. Under such circumstances it was held that it was error, after the expiration of the continuance, to allow defendant to read such affidavit to the jury over plaintiff's objection, since plaintiff's admission under such circumstances does not stand for all time, but ceases when the emergency ceases. Padgett v. Moll, 159 Mo. 143, 60 S. W. 121, 81 Am. St. Rep. 347, 52 L. R. A. 854.

Allegations must correspond with issues.—If the testimony be material, and the court determines that the party has shown sufficient ground for a continuance, the other side may elect to continue the cause or go to trial, conceding as true what his adversary says his witness if present would prove. But although the party against whom such proof is offered cannot deny its truth, yet it must be within the issues, for the statute does not dispense with the rule that the allegata et probata must correspond. Bryan v. Coursey, 3 Md. 61.

54. The court should in such case instruct the jury that they should take the facts as true and not consider the contradictory evidence. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Lynes, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 1119.

Previous admission of contradictory evidence.—Where defendant filed an affidavit for a continuance, showing the absence of a physician whom it had summoned as a witness, and that if present he would testify that he had examined plaintiff and found him to be sound and well, and plaintiff to prevent a continuance agreed to secure the presence of the absent witness when defendant should be ready to examine him, it was error, upon plaintiff's failure, although without his fault, to secure the attendance of the absent witness, to go on with the trial, although plaintiff then admitted the truth of the statements of the affidavit for a continuance and that he was sound and well at the time of the alleged examination, as plaintiff had already introduced testimony to show the severity and permanence of his injuries, the effect of which testimony could not be removed. Louisville, etc., Co. v. Carothers, 65 S. W. 833, 66 S. W. 385, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1673.

55. Montgomery, etc., Plank-Road Co. v. Webb, 27 Ala. 618, an admission only that if witness were in court "he would swear," etc.

credible.⁵⁶ And although, where it is admitted that the witness would testify as stated in the affidavit, the testimony must be deemed as actually before the court,⁵⁷ such admission does not make incompetent evidence admissible.⁵⁸ The true test is, Could the witness if present be permitted to testify to the facts? If not they should be excluded from the jury, thus putting the affidavit on an equality with the testimony of the witness.⁵⁹ It is the duty of the court to exclude from the jury such evidence as may be improper for their consideration,⁶⁰ and it may instruct the jury as to those matters in which an instruction would ordinarily be given.⁶¹

X. WAIVER OF RIGHT TO CONTINUANCE.

Where a party appears and goes to trial without asking a continuance it is a Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3596, recites: "If the affidavit does not contain a sufficient statement of facts, as herein required, the court shall overrule the same; but if, upon the contrary, the court shall find the affidavit sufficient, the cause shall be continued, unless the opposite party will admit that the witness, if present, would swear to the facts set out in the affidavit, in which event the cause shall not be continued, but the party moving therefor shall read as the evidence of such witness the facts stated in such affidavit, and the opposite party may disprove the facts disclosed, or prove any contradictory statements made by such absent witness in relation to the matter in issue or on trial." Richey v. Branson, 33 Mo. App. 418.

56. Montgomery, etc., Plank-Road Co. v. Webb, 27 Ala. 618.

Credibility of witness may be attacked in the same manner as that of a deposition.—by impeaching the veracity of the witness. U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Wright, 33 Ohio St. 533.

Inconsistent declarations.—In Pool v. Deviers, 30 Ala. 672, to prevent a continuance of a case, the defendant admitted that an absent witness if present would prove a certain material fact. The defendant proposed to prove that the witness had made declarations inconsistent with proof which it was admitted he would make if present. The court refused to permit the proposed evidence to go to the jury. It was held that the admission of the evidence would have violated the rule that a witness cannot be discredited by proof of counter declarations, unless the witness was previously asked whether he did not make such declarations at a specified time and place. That if the defendant was placed in a situation which deprived him of all opportunity to resort to that mode of discrediting the witness, it was the result of his own act in making the admission for the purpose of procuring the trial, and that he should have taken the result of a deprivation of such testimony into account, when determining whether to make the admission or submit to a continuance.

57. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 279; State v. Eisenmeyer, 94 Ill. 96; Utley v. Burns, 70 Ill. 162; Woolwine v. Bick, 39 Mo. App. 495.

58. State v. Eisenmeyer, 94 Ill. 96; Aurora v. Scott, 82 Ill. App. 616; Woolwine v.

Bick, 39 Mo. App. 495. The admission made by the plaintiff is not required by the statute to be of the competency or relevancy of the statements, but only that if the witness was present he would so testify, and does not preclude any legal objection which might be made if the witness himself were present. See Iowa Code, § 2751. State v. Geddis, 42 Iowa 264. In this case the parts excluded are matters of opinion and other matters which the witness would not be competent to testify to if present.

Not evidence of conclusions.—The affidavit admitted in evidence is proof of the facts stated only, and not of the conclusion alleged therein. Eagle Mfg. Co. v. Jennings, 29 Kan. 657, 44 Am. Rep. 668. See also Wilson v. Purl, 133 Mo. 367, 34 S. W. 884.

Statement of information and belief.—In Richey v. Branson, 33 Mo. App. 418, it was held that statements made on information and belief of affiant had no evidentiary value and could not be considered in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to take the case to the jury.

59. State v. Eisenmeyer, 94 Ill. 96; State v. Geddis, 42 Iowa 264.

60. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Clark, 70 Ill. 276; Nave v. Horton, 9 Ind. 563; Strong v. Hart, 7 Iowa 484.

61. Nave v. Horton, 9 Ind. 563; Elsner v. Supreme Lodge K. & L. of H., 98 Mo. 640, 11 S. W. 991.

Erroneous instructions.—Where, to avoid a continuance on account of an absent witness, the adverse party admits that such witness would testify as set forth in the application for the continuance, it is error for the court to tell the jury in effect to be wary of his testimony in view of the means used to get it before them, since it is entitled to the same credit and the same probative force as his deposition would have, had it been taken in the regular statutory method. Ely, etc., Dry-Goods Co. v. McLaughlin, 78 Mo. App. 578. In Utley v. Burns, 70 Ill. 162, it was held error, after an affidavit for a continuance on account of the absence of a witness had been admitted in evidence, to instruct the jury that they should attach no more weight "to the statements than would be attached to the statements of a witness who does not disclose his means of knowledge, and who is not subject to cross-examination."

waiver of his right thereto.⁶² So also a party may waive his rights as to a continuance by withdrawing his pleadings or defense,⁶³ or by subsequently filing pleadings in the cause.⁶⁴

XI. SECOND OR FURTHER CONTINUANCES.

A. Right to Such Continuances. While there is no fixed rule as to the length of time a case may be kept on the docket, or the number of continuances that should be granted in a particular case,⁶⁵ yet as a general rule second and

Absence of leading counsel.—Although, under the Louisiana statute of 1856, the absence of leading counsel is a peremptory cause for continuance, a failure to except to the overruling of a motion for a continuance on such ground is a waiver of the right. Wooldridge v. Rickert, 33 La. Ann. 234.

Admissions in affidavit.—Where a continuance was refused on defendant's agreeing to admit matters set out in a writing not identical with the affidavit, it was held no error, because, under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3596, the plaintiff was entitled to read the statements in the affidavit to the jury as an admission, and not having offered to do so had waived the point. Amb's v. Hill, 10 Mo. App. 108.

Cause not triable at term.—If a party goes to trial without objection after a motion for continuance has been overruled, the judgment will not be reversed, although the cause was not triable at that term, and the motion for continuance was unnecessary. Watson v. Walsh, 10 Mo. 454.

Renewal of application.—Where on the day of trial the sheriff had not made his return as to a subpoena issued for a witness on behalf of the defendant, and a motion for continuance on this ground was overruled and the case continued until the following day, when the sheriff made his return that the witness could not be found, it was held that in the absence of any renewal of the application for continuance after the return of the sheriff it was not error to proceed to trial. State v. Turner, 26 La. Ann. 390.

63. Arnold v. Trundle, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 115; Owings v. Beall, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 257. Compare Wright v. Basye, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 419, where it was held that the defendant's objection to the refusal of a continuance to which he was entitled was not waived by a subsequent withdrawal of his plea.

An abandonment of a particular defense, for which the testimony of an absent witness was wanted, is a waiver of an exception taken to a refusal to grant a continuance asked on the ground of such absence. Crawford v. Redway, 62 Ind. 573.

Compliance with order of court.—A defendant does not waive an error of the court in refusing him a continuance by complying with the order of the court requiring him to answer immediately. Meredith v. Lackey, 14 Ind. 529.

64. Schultz v. McLean, 109 Cal. 437, 42 Pac. 557.

By demurring to an additional paragraph counting on a cause of action accrued since service of the summons the defendant waives his right to a continuance. Farrington v. Hawkins, 24 Ind. 253.

By withdrawing his answer and demurring to the petition and electing to stand on his demurrer after the overruling thereof, a defendant waives error in overruling his previous application for continuance on account of the absence of witnesses. Day v. Mooney, 3 Okla. 608, 41 Pac. 142.

65. Wood v. McGuire, 21 Ga. 576; Bowen v. Douglass, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 44, 1 L. ed. 282; Hammond v. Haws, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,002, Wall. Sr. 1.

Necessity for defendant's presence and inability to attend from sickness.—Where a case was set for trial on June 19, but owing to an accident to defendant was postponed until September 13, when defendant's attorney made affidavit showing the necessity of defendant's presence, and his physician made affidavit that he was not in a condition to be present or to have his deposition taken, but would probably be able to attend to his affairs by October 15, it was error to refuse a further continuance. Morehouse v. Morehouse, 136 Cal. 332, 68 Pac. 976.

No fixed length of time.—The fact that a case has been four years in court is no reason for a refusal of a further continuance, provided proper grounds are shown for it, as where it is asked for to obtain newly discovered evidence, and where the party applying is not chargeable with the delay. Hooper v. Memphis Branch R., etc., Co., 19 Ga. 85. See also Welsh v. Savery, 4 Iowa 241. So in Thompson v. Lewis, 2 C. L. R. 707, it was held that the court would further postpone a trial for the absence of a witness beyond the seas, where there was reasonable probability of his return, although the case had already been postponed more than a year.

Peremptory rule for trial.—A stipulation or peremptory rule for trial will never be enforced so strictly as to work injustice. If any unforeseen accident or casualty intervenes which puts it out of the power of the party or his witnesses to attend the court will, notwithstanding such rule, postpone a trial. Livingston v. Delafield, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 6; Bowen v. Douglass, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 44, 1 L. ed. 282; Farr v. McDowell, 1 Bay (S. C.) 31; Hammond v. Haws, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,002, Wall. Sr. 1. See also Wilkes v. Phillips, 37 Ga. 588.

Where the continuances of the party have been exhausted it is at the discretion of the court whether it will grant a further continuance at its own instance, having a due further continuances are not favored by the courts and will usually be denied,⁶⁶ unless the applicant can show that he has used all reasonable effort to effect the results upon which the grounds of continuance are based.⁶⁷

So where two continuances have been granted the same party, if a mistrial intervene, his application for another continuance is treated as an application for a third continuance. Stewart v. Austin, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 186.

Second application at same term.—A second application to continue a cause, based on the same facts as the first application, cannot be made at the same term. *Northwestern, etc., Aid Assoc. v. Attachment after subpoena.—A party should, on a second application, be required to show something more than a mere service of a subpoena; he should avail himself of other legal means to compel the attendance of the witness. If within the reach of the process of the court, so as to be availing, the party should apply to the court for an attachment to compel his attendance so soon as he has failed to attend under the subpoena. Shook v. Thomas, 21 Ill. 87.

Transitory witness.—In Breedlove v. Bundy, 96 Ind. 319, it was held that where there was not a sufficient showing of diligence in attempting to procure the testimony of an absent witness, and it appeared that he was transitory, going from one point to another in another state, so as to appear that there was no likelihood that this testimony could be procured if a continuance were granted, the refusal of an application for a second continuance was not an abuse of discretion. And so it was held in the case of an absconding partner who had carried off the partnership books. Slade v. McClure, 76 Ill. 319.

Virginia and West Virginia practice.—With reference to the continuances of cases by the circuit court, it may be regarded as settled law in Virginia and West Virginia that where a party has obtained one or more continuances at prior terms of the court, and the court in the exercise of its discretion refuses to again continue his case, even when he has brought himself apparently within the general rule, which ordinarily entitles a party to a continuance, the appellate court will not reverse such case because of the refusal of the circuit court to grant such continuance, unless the party complaining makes out a very strong case, and the appellate court sees that the party has suffered from an abuse by the circuit court of its legal discretion. Some appellate courts have gone further than ours and have held that they could not review the exercise of such discretion by the inferior court, whose opportunities of exercising its discretion in such case must greatly exceed that of the appellate court. It has, however, been determined that the exercise of such discretion is reviewable; but under such circumstances the leaning of the court will be strong to support the action of the circuit court. Logie v. Black, 24 W. Va. 1.

urged in favor of the relief,⁶⁸ and the diligence employed by the applicant.⁶⁹ Even where the continuance is asked on a different state of facts, the statements in the affidavit are required to be more specific than upon an original application,⁷⁰ and it is better in all cases to follow the words of the statute itself.⁷¹

XII. REVIEW OF ORDER GRANTING OR REFUSING CONTINUANCE.

A. Power to Review. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the discretion of the court in granting or refusing a continuance is not the subject of review.⁷² In a great majority of jurisdictions, however, the rule is otherwise and the discretion of the trial court held subject to review by the appellate court,⁷³

68. Ogden v. Gibbons, 5 N. J. L. 518; Arnold v. Hockney, 51 Tex. 46; Coleman v. Beardsley, (Tex. Sup. 1891) 16 S. W. 1011.

Absence of witness.—When a second application is made for the continuance of a cause on account of the absence of a material witness, the affidavit must state the facts the absent witness is expected to prove more specifically than they had already been set out in a pleading in the action. State v. Bennett, 31 Mo. 462.

Designation as to number.—It is not required that the application should state specifically that it is a first or second one. It is sufficient if the bill of exceptions to the ruling of the court thereon shows that it is a first or second one. Arnold v. Hockney, 51 Tex. 46; Barth v. Jester, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 223.

Special affidavit.—If there has already been a postponement of the trial at the instance of the party soliciting a second adjournment, or any other circumstances raising a supposition that his application is merely for delay, then he must present a special affidavit. Brooklyn Oil Works v. Brown, 38 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 451.

69. In Shook v. Thomas, 21 Ill. 87, 89, the court said: "On a first application a less degree of diligence would satisfy the court, than on a second or third application. The fact that a party applies for the continuance of a cause a second time on account of the absence of the same witness, might create the suspicion that the party was not sufficiently anxious for his attendance to make the necessary effort to procure it, and would require evidence of greater diligence than if it were a first application, and so would it continue to require greater diligence on each successive application." See also Ogden v. Gibbons, 5 N. J. L. 518.

70. On the third trial of a cause wherein plaintiff has had a continuance by stipulation, a motion for the further continuance, to amend his complaint and obtain his evidence, is properly denied where the affidavit neither shows the amendments desired nor alleges want of evidence to support the amended complaint. Schultz v. McLean, 109 Cal. 437, 42 Pac. 557.

71. The application for a second continuance because a material witness was absent should state that no other witness is in attendance by whom the defendant could prove the same facts, or, in the words of the statute, "that the testimony cannot be obtained from any other source." Champion v. Angier, 16 Tex. 93.

Grounds complying with the law.—If one application for a continuance has been correctly overruled, but on a subsequent day a second application is made upon grounds substantially different from the first, and which complies substantially and fully with the law, a continuance should be granted thereon. Welsh v. Savery, 4 Iowa 241.

72. Planters', etc., Bank v. Willis, 5 Ala. 770; Givens v. Robbins, 5 Ala. 676; Lingenfelter v. Williams, (Pa. 1897) 9 Atl. 653; Woods v. Young, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 237, 2 L. ed. 607. In Evans v. Bolling, 5 Ala. 550, it was decided that the refusal to continue an action could not be reviewed on error in chancery any more than at law. See also Planters', etc., Bank v. Willis, 5 Ala. 770, 779, where it was said: "Though the court may exercise its discretion unwisely, it is not competent for an appellate tribunal to revise the matter so as to administer more complete justice." And see, generally, APPEAL AND ERROR.

In Massachusetts the right of review is recognized but only to a very limited extent. It is held that a ruling on a decision granting or refusing a continuance is not subject to exception (Kittredge v. Russell, 114 Mass. 67; Pickering v. Reynolds, 111 Mass. 83; Monk v. Beal, 2 Allen, 585; Reynard v. Brecknell, 4 Pick. 302), and that the court can grant the party a remedy only upon a petition for a review (Reynard v. Brecknell, 4 Pick. 302).

In Pennsylvania while the supreme court does not ordinarily regard a continuance or a refusal to continue the trial of a cause in the common pleas as reviewable it will review a refusal to continue which subjects parties to a trial without witnesses, and which is in violation of a written rule of court. Schrimpton v. Bertolet, 155 Pa. St. 638, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. 429, 26 Atl. 776.

B. Basis of Review. While this is true, the appellate court acts with some hesitancy in disturbing the ruling of the trial court. If the latter has exercised a reasonable discretion, its decision will not be disturbed.⁷⁶ It is only in cases where there has been an obvious abuse of discretion that the reviewing court will reverse the ruling of the trial court.⁷⁷

Presumption not conclusive.—The judge before whom it is made has, in the manner and appearance and acts of the applicant, means of a correct decision with which the court at bar cannot be furnished. His determination of the question therefore affords strong presumption of correctness, but it is not conclusive. If a clear case of mistake on his part be made out, and we perceive that injustice has been done, the evil will be remedied by a new trial. But the inquiry always is, Has injustice been done? has the party been injured? If he has not, no good reason can be given why he should receive the favor of trying his cause over again. Ogden v. Gibbons, 5 N. J. L. 518.

Erroneous idea of law.—In Maynard v. Cleveland, 76 Ga. 52, 56, the court said: "This court has repeatedly held that continuances are in the discretion of the court, and that, when refused, unless there is an abuse of discretion, this court will not interfere. But where it plainly appears that the court below acted on an erroneous notion of the law, and that without that error, the showing would have been satisfactory, and that in consequence of the refusal of the continuance the party has suffered a serious disadvantage, we hold that a tribunal for the correction of errors of law has distinct ground for reviewing the decision."

I. DEFINITION.

II. POWER AND NECESSITY OF GRANTING.

A. Power to Grant. Where the court conceives it to be necessary for the more perfect attainment of justice it has the power, upon the application either of the state or of the accused, to continue a case;² and the fact that the offense is a capital one creates no exception.³ So too the court may in certain instances continue a criminal cause of its own motion.⁴

B. Necessity of Granting—1. RULE STATED. A party charged with a crime has no natural or inalienable right to a continuance, and in the absence of a statute

1. Bouvier L. Dict. And see CONTINUANCES IN CIVIL CASES, ante p. 75.

"The term originated when all the proceedings in a cause were conducted orally and in presence of the court, and were entered upon record as they transpired. As the proceedings generally occupied more days than one, the court used to adjourn them from time to time; if these adjournments, which were called continuances, were not made, the suit was at an end, since there was no period at which either party had a right again to call the court's attention to it; and if the continuance, though made, were not entered on the record, the suit was equally at an end, since the record was the only evidence the court would admit of the fact of the continuance. Subsequently, when a cause was put down in the list of causes to be tried at a certain time, and, from some cause or other, it was not then tried, but was adjourned, a minute of such adjournment was entered on the record, which was technically termed entering a continuance, because such entry signified that the cause was not yet finished, but continued pending." Abbott L. Dict.

Must be for time certain.—A continuance, within the lawful meaning of this term, must be for a definite and certain time. Com. v. Maloney, 145 Mass. 205, 13 N. E. 482. See also State v. Nathaniel, 52 La. Ann. 558, 26 So. 1008.

Distinguished from postponement.—It is conceived that, properly speaking, the word "postponement" is preferable when the purpose is to obtain a continuance to another day during the term at which the case is fixed rather than to a future term. See State v. Nathaniel, 52 La. Ann. 558, 26 So. 1008.

So too a postponement to another day in the same term cannot be considered as a "continuance" within the meaning of a statute providing for the averment of different facts upon an application for a second continuance than on the first. State v. Maguire, 69 Mo. 197. But as in the almost universal phraseology of the courts these terms are used interchangeably, and a postponement to another day during the same term is spoken of in many cases as a continuance, no distinction is made in the use of the two terms in this article.

is not entitled to the same as a mere matter of right or law.⁵ At common law such applications were addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and its decision thereon could not be assigned as error;⁶ and while now the practice acts in perhaps all American jurisdictions authorize the review of such decisions by the appellate tribunals, the rule is well established that the trial court still acts within its own discretion in granting or refusing an application for a continuance in a criminal case, whether it be on behalf of the accused or of the state; which ruling will not be disturbed in the absence of a clear abuse of discretion.⁷

2. APPLICATION OF RULE. The discretion which a trial court exercises must be judicial and not arbitrary;⁸ it is the guardian of the rights of the accused as well where a great public calamity had befallen the city, or where a condition of affairs exists that is notorious, and about which from its very nature it is apparent there could be no conflict of opinion, as it would be idle ceremony to require an affidavit setting forth the existence of such fact in order to authorize the court to act.

8. State v. Poe, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 647; Irvine v. State, 20 Tex. App. 12; Harris v. State, 18 Tex. App. 287.

as of those of the people at large,⁹ and should not unduly force him to trial,¹⁰ but when exercised with a reasonable degree of judicial acumen and fairness it is one which the higher courts are loth to review or disturb;¹¹ and the mere fact that the case was disposed of with unusual despatch is not an ear-mark of error.¹² The presiding judge must be, to a certain extent, free to secure a speedy and expeditious trial when such speed is not inconsistent with its fairness;¹³ and the business before the court, the number of witnesses, and venire of men in attendance are all to be considered,¹⁴ as well as the shifts, devices, and false pretenses to which defendants often resort to escape or delay justice.¹⁵ And while it is not necessary, to constitute abuse, that the court acts wickedly or with intentional unfairness,¹⁶ it is essential that it be shown to have committed a clear or palpable error, without the correction of which manifest injustice will be done;¹⁷ and since the court trying the cause is from personal observation familiar with all the attendant circumstances, and has the best opportunity of forming a correct opinion upon the case presented, the presumption will be in favor of its action;¹⁸ and in no case will the exercise of this discretion be reviewed where it manifestly appears that justice has been done without sacrificing the rights of the defendant.¹⁹

3. LIMITATION OF RULE — a. In General. The rule that the court may exercise its discretion in granting continuances is, however, in some jurisdictions, subject to certain limitations prescribed by statutes;²⁰ these provisions are inclined to

9. People v. Horton, 4 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 222, holding, however, that it cannot for light causes jeopard the rights or interests of the public; and that where the court is informed by the indictment that evidence sufficient, in the opinion of the grand jury, to warrant a conviction of the prisoner has been adduced before it, and where the district attorney moves the cause for trial, the presumption is that that evidence is ready to be laid before the petit jury, and a criminal court cannot without good cause grant a delay which may lead to a dispersion of the witnesses and the loss of material testimony.

19. Brown v. State, 85 Tenn. 439, 2 S. W. 895.

20. For judicial construction of old statutory provisions concerning the granting of continuances see State v. Moran, 7 Iowa 236; Com. v. Viers, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 377, holding that the object of the statute allowing as grounds of continuances the absence of the defendant as a volunteer in the army of Kentucky, or of the United States, being not to grant immunity to crime but to simply postpone investigation of all prosecutions where the defendant should engage in the service of his country, such statutes applied as well to those indicted before as after its passage.

The statutes with regard to continuances in civil cases in some jurisdictions do not apply to criminal cases (State v. Flemons, 6 Ind. 279); while in other states the causes for continuances in the two kinds of cases are the same (Territory v. Perkins, 2 Mont. 467). But where such statutes do not govern it has been held that it is reasonable to consult them in the absence of special provisions in the criminal code, in establishing rules, as the court must, in relation to procedure in criminal cases. Miller v. State, 42 Ind. 544.

liberality in favor of the accused,²¹ and should, at least when life is involved, receive a liberal interpretation.²² And where the statutes are fully complied with, and no facts discrediting the affidavit for continuance are shown, the court has no discretion in the matter but must grant the same.²³

b. In Case of Joint Defendants. A continuance granted on the application of one joint defendant operates as a continuance to all of them, when no severance has been granted;²⁴ but after severance the fact that a continuance is granted to one does not entitle the other to the same as a matter of right;²⁵ nor on the other hand does it preclude him from demanding a trial if he so desires.²⁶ So too it may be said that a statute providing that where two or more persons are indicted, either jointly or severally, for an offense growing out of the same transaction, either co-defendant may, for the purpose of defensive testimony, by making the prescribed affidavit, have his co-defendant first tried, does not contemplate that if such co-defendant is convicted and appeals, the other shall be entitled to a continuance as a matter of right until the appeal is determined.²⁷ Such severance may be demanded at any time before an announcement of ready for trial on the merits,²⁸ and where the affidavit for severance has been made the state cannot defeat its operation and effect by continuing the case of the co-defendant whose testimony is desired by the affiant.²⁹

III. GROUNDS.

A. In General. The more usual and prominent grounds generally alleged as cause for a continuance may be separately distinguished and profitably commented upon,³⁰ as they are often specifically enumerated by statute or have become established, by the courts having long exercised their discretion upon a certain state of facts in a uniform manner;³¹ but no universal enumeration of such grounds is possible, as the sufficiency of a cause for a continuance is necessarily dependent upon, and often intricately interwoven with many facts and circumstances peculiar to the case in question. Perhaps the usual and most cogent

"First term," as used in a statute authorizing a continuance at the first term on the affidavit of the accused, to the effect that popular prejudice precludes him from a safe trial, means the term at which the prosecuting officer demands the arraignment of the prisoner, and not necessarily the first term after the indictment. John v. State, 10 Tex. App. 610, where, by a later statute, it was held that even where the application is in conformity to the requirements of the statute its truth and merits are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. And indeed this latter view seems to be the one taken by the Georgia court in the interpretation of the statutes of that state. See Malone v. State, 49 Ga. 210.

The rules as to granting continuances are often said to be substantially the same in both civil and criminal causes (Ballard v. State, 31 Fla. 266, 12 So. 865; Gladden v. State, 12 Fla. 562; Hyde v. State, 16 Tex. 445, 67 Am. Dec. 630), although partly by virtue of the statute and partly from judicial decisions, differences in practice in the respective states have arisen (State v. Nathaniel, 52 La. Ann. 558, 26 So. 1008); it being generally agreed, however, that, because of the superior temptation to delay arising in criminal cases, the matter presented for a continuance is to be scanned more closely (Ballard v. State, 31 Fla. 266, 12 So. 865; Gladden v. State, 12 Fla. 562; Hyde v. State, 16 Tex. 445, 67 Am. Dec. 630). And it is said that the affidavit for continuance of a person indicted for felony cannot be given the same explicit credence as that of a party to a civil action. State v. Horton, 4 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 222.

consideration is whether or not an injury will be done the applicant by a refusal;³² although circumstances working a hardship on defendant are not sufficient grounds if beyond the control of the court.³³ It is not a sufficient ground to allege that the ministerial and other officers of the court actually and de facto acting as such have no legal right to their respective offices.³⁴ And while there may be peculiar circumstances sufficient to warrant a court in delaying the trial of a criminal prosecution for a reasonable time on account of the pendency of a civil suit involving the same question,³⁵ the mere existence of such suit is not of itself sufficient ground;³⁶ and it has been held that the criminal action should not be continued unless the party is to be used as a witness for the state.³⁷ But where defendant has been convicted of a certain offense and an appeal has been taken, a trial against him, under the same statute, upon the same state of facts, and upon

Virginia.—Early v. Com., 86 Va. 921, 11 S. E. 795.

That defendant was in attendance as a juror for a week previous to the calling of his case is not ground for a continuance, where it is not shown that by reason of such service he is less prepared to go to trial than he would otherwise have been. Johnson v. State, 83 Ga. 553, 10 S. E. 207.

The fact that an order rescinding certain procedure has not been entered upon the record of the court does not entitle the defendant to a continuance, where it is not claimed that he was surprised by the order not having been entered of record or that he is not at the time ready for trial. State v. Gillick, 10 Iowa 98.

The misspelling of the names of witnesses in indorsing them on an information does not entitle defendant to a continuance, where his affidavit does not distinctly allege that he was surprised by the introduction of their testimony. State v. Everitt, 14 Wash. 574, 45 Pac. 150.

Where a stenographer is in court and it is clear that his attendance should have been compelled by a subpoena had he not been present and that he could be compelled under oath to develop from his notes any testimony taken on preliminary examination, a failure to file a transcript of the evidence contained in such notes is not a good ground for a continuance, as it is plain that no injury results therefrom. Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 16 S. Ct. 62, 40 L. ed. 237.

33. State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 443, holding that while the arrest and indictment of important witnesses for the defendant because of testimony given by them on his former trial might work a hardship upon him, it was a matter beyond the control of the court, and not sufficient ground. But see State v. Harris, 22 Wash. 57, 60 Pac. 58, where it is held that a continuance should be granted until a material witness whose conviction for perjury which was pending on appeal was determined.

The private and personal convenience of the defendant and his counsel is not a sufficient consideration to authorize a continuance. People v. Jackson, 111 N. Y. 362, 19 N. E. 54, 19 N. Y. St. 506, 6 N. Y. Crim. 392. See also Com. v. Hurley, 158 Mass. 159, 33 N. E. 342.

34. To permit a party to urge this as a ground would give him the right to commence with a kind of a collateral quo warranto as to the judge, and continue thus down through the official roster of the court. State v. O'Grady, 31 La. Ann. 378.

The mere fact that a defendant has turned state's evidence does not, as a matter of right, entitle him to a continuance. Runnels v. State, 28 Ark. 121; Com. v. Dabney, 1 Rob. (Va.) 696, 40 Am. Dec. 717.

35. Taylor v. Com., 29 Gratt. (Va.) 780. See also Com. v. Bliss, 1 Mass. 32.

36. Com. v. Hurd, 177 Pa. St. 481, 35 Atl. 682. Taylor v. Com., 29 Gratt. (Va.) 780.

That a special plea in abatement has been overruled is no ground for a continuance. Carter v. State, 75 Ga. 747.

Unwarranted belief and supposition of defendant.—Where the only grounds stated in an affidavit for a continuance is that the defendant was informed by someone, just whom it does not appear, that the case would not be tried at that term, and that the district attorney had no intention of calling it for trial that term, and that the witnesses for the state were not present until the day before the affidavits were made, a continuance is properly refused. State v. Smith, 60 Iowa 755, 15 N. W. 593.

37. Com. v. Elliott, 2 Mass. 372.

The fact that difficult and important legal questions will likely arise on the trial will not ordinarily justify the postponement to a time when, by the practice of the court, if a division of opinion should occur between the trial judges, the point or points could be certified to the supreme court; such manner being the only authorized mode of sending questions of law arising on the trial of criminal cases to the upper court for revision. U. S. v. Fullerton, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,175, 6 Blatchf. 275.

the ground of the case already pending in the appellate court, and involving the same questions, should be continued until the determination of the former case in the appellate court;³⁸ although the mere fact that accused has been convicted of another offense and is at the time awaiting sentence is not ground for a continuance on a charge of an entirely different offense.³⁹ Nor would the fact that an accused who is put on trial for murder has been at that term convicted of another murder be such cogent reason for a continuance that a refusal would be reversible error.⁴⁰

B. Special or Particular Grounds — 1. ABSENCE OF COUNSEL — a. In General.

A request for continuance on the ground of the absence of a certain counsel is not looked upon by the courts with favor,⁴¹ especially where such counsel is attending to professional duties in another court, or in some other manner would retard the operation of the court by his personal convenience or business.⁴² And generally speaking a continuance will not be granted on this ground where defendant is ably represented by other counsel, and it does not appear that his rights have been jeopardized or injury done him by the absence of certain counsel;⁴³ or where, defendant's counsel being engaged in the trial of another

38. White v. Com., 79 Va. 611.

39. State v. Robertson, 48 La. Ann. 1026, 20 So. 167.

The fact that there are cross indictments between the prosecutor and prisoner, the prosecutor having been acquitted on a previous day, is not ground for a continuance. Galloway v. State, 25 Ga. 596.

40. Jones v. State, 61 Ark. 88, 32 S. W. 81.

That a prisoner desires to find certain persons to join with him in an affidavit to change the venue does not as a right entitle him to a postponement or continuance. Wall v. State, 18 Tex. 682, 70 Am. Dec. 302.

The fact that a witness whose name was indorsed on the information was returned as a juror is not ground for granting the accused a continuance, as continuances are not to be granted merely because of the acquaintance of a juror with the prosecution. People v. Williams, 118 Mich. 692, 77 N. W. 248.

Where the judge of another district presided at a trial pursuant to a call made by the presiding judge of the district in which the trial was held, it is not ground for a continuance that the certificate of record does not affirmatively set forth that the presiding judge was disqualified or disabled, or that in his opinion the proper despatch of public business required the calling in of another judge. Com. v. Scouton, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 503. See also Payne v. State, 60 Ala. 80.

Where there is an objection to the formation or personnel of the jury which could have been properly raised by a challenge, such objection cannot be availed of by a motion for a continuance. *Humphries v. cause, the court offers to assign him counsel, which offer he declined.⁴⁴ Where, however, the higher court conceives that the ends of justice require the presence at the trial of a particular counsel, and he is unexpectedly absent through no fault of the accused, it will be held reversible error on the part of the trial court to refuse a continuance.⁴⁵

b. By Reason of Illness. A request for continuance on the ground that the absence of the counsel is due to his sickness is of course received with more favor than when such absence is due to his personal business transactions; and where defendant has been unable or has not had sufficient time to provide other counsel, a continuance should be granted.⁴⁶ Such sickness must, however, be bona fide and sufficient to incapacitate him from conveniently appearing and making an able defense;⁴⁷ nor is it error to refuse a continuance because of the sickness of a certain counsel, where defendant has sufficient array of other counsel, or where other able counsel are appointed to defend him, and no injury to defendant's rights are shown.⁴⁸

2. ABSENCE OF EVIDENCE—a. Of Witnesses—(1) IN GENERAL. It has been said that the rule governing the granting of a continuance on the ground of absence of witnesses is the same in both civil and criminal cases;⁴⁹ under this rule the court is invested with a certain amount of discretion which, when the facts and circumstances on which it acts are not certified to the appellate court, will be presumed to be properly exercised.⁵⁰ If the absent witnesses can be procured by a short postponement of the trial, and this mode is adopted, a continuance cannot be claimed;⁵¹ nor is it error to refuse a continuance where defendant refuses to avail himself of an offer of postponement sufficient to enable him to procure their attendance;⁵² nor where the court is convinced that their absence is due to the procurement and connivance of defendant,⁵³ or that the continuance is not requested in good faith.⁵⁴ Certain concurring facts have, however, from a very early date, been considered by the courts as guiding stars to the proper exercise of this discretion,⁵⁵ which, either by virtue of judicial precedent or stat-

55. In Rex v. D'Eon, 1 W. Bl. 510, Lord Mansfield held that to put off a trial ute,⁵⁶ should be followed. Hence where it is shown that the evidence of the absent witness is material and admissible;⁵⁷ that the testimony, in view of the established facts, is not probably untrue;⁵⁸ that their attendance can probably be procured at another term;⁵⁹ that the facts expected to be proved cannot be obtained from other disinterested witnesses;⁶⁰ and that the defendant has exercised proper diligence to procure their attendance,⁶¹ a denial of a continuance under such circumstances would operate unfairly to a defendant, would deprive him of a fair and impartial trial, and would therefore constitute reversible error.⁶²

(II) RIGHT TO PERSONAL ATTENDANCE. A defendant in a criminal action should not be compelled to invoke a statutory method of procuring evidence from absent witnesses, but is entitled to their personal attendance if it can be because of the absence of a witness it must appear (1) that the witness was really material and appears to the court to be so; (2) that the party who pleads has been guilty of no neglect; (3) that the witness must be had at the time to which the trial is deferred. This case was followed in Rex v. Jones, 8 East 31, 9 Rev. Rep. 368, and has been cited and approved, as the clear and proper enunciation of the law, by modern courts. See State v. Nathaniel, 52 La. Ann. 558, 26 So. 1008; People v. Jackson, 111 N. Y. 362, 19 N. E. 54, 19 N. Y. St. 506, 6 N. Y. Crim. 393; People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 369; Hyde v. State, 16 Tex. 445, 67 Am. Dec. 630.

56. For in some jurisdictions it is expressly provided by statute that where the proof which the accused expects to make by absent witnesses is material and cannot be satisfactorily made by other witnesses, and he has used due diligence to procure their presence, a continuance must be granted unless the state will admit the truth of such evidence. Ryder v. State, 100 Ga. 523, 28 S. E. 246, 62 Am. St. Rep. 334, 38 L. R. A. 721; Robinson v. Com., 68 S. W. 1099, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 564; Territory v. Kinney, 3 N. M. 656, 9 Pac. 599.

obtained without unreasonable delay.⁶³ So too he has a right to put them on the stand in the order he conceives most advantageous to his defense, and need not vary this order because a witness, for some providential cause, would be absent at the time he desired to introduce his testimony.⁶⁴

(III) ESSENTIAL REQUISITES OF GROUND—(A) Elements of Testimony—

(1) RELEVANT, MATERIAL, AND RESPONSIVE—(a) RULE STATED. It is not reversible error to refuse to grant a continuance on account of the absence of witnesses, where the testimony sought to be adduced does not appear to the court to be important, or as materially affecting the guilt or innocence of the accused,⁶⁵ where it is too vague⁶⁶ or remote⁶⁷ to affect the verdict, where it is objectionable as a mere conclusion,⁶⁸ where it is not responsive to the material issues presented,⁶⁹ where it is not inconsistent with the theory on which the defendant's guilt is sought to be established,⁷⁰ as well as where the witness is incompetent,⁷¹ or where for any reason the testimony sought to be introduced, from the nature of the case involved and the other testimony submitted, is by the general rules of evidence, irrelevant, immaterial, or for other reasons inadmissible or unimportant.⁷²

The policy of the law is not merely considerations affecting the defendant only, but also every consideration affecting the ends of public justice, irrespective of individual interest. This is manifest from the fact that the deposition of such witnesses are allowed to be read in evidence only upon further evidence at the trial that their personal attendance cannot be obtained. It is to the interest of the people as well as the defendant that the defendant's witnesses should be made to give their testimony in the presence of the jury, as much weight may be added to or taken from such testimony by the personal appearance, bearing, and manner of the witnesses while under examination. If these add to the weight of his testimony the defendant ought not to be deprived of such effect except upon the grounds of necessity; and if they detract therefrom, such effect should be secured to the people in order that the ends of public justice may be subserved. People v. Dodge, 28 Cal. 445.

(b) APPLICATION OF RULE—aa. Contradictory Testimony—(aa) Of Witness' Previous Statements. It is not error to refuse to grant a continuance to secure an absent witness where the material facts to which it is claimed he will testify are contradictory to such witness' previous affidavits;⁷³ where such material facts would be contradictory of the witness' previous testimony as given on a preliminary examination;⁷⁴ where affidavits of such witnesses, procured and filed by the state, directly contradict the alleged facts to which it is claimed the witness will swear;⁷⁵ or where affidavits are presented that the witness had made former statements contradictory of the evidence to which it is alleged he will testify.⁷⁶ On the other hand it has been held that a continuance to procure such witness ought not to be denied merely because such witness had, while not under oath, made statements inconsistent with the facts which it is alleged he would testify to.⁷⁷

Affecting admissibility of dying declarations.—Evidence tending to show that other evidence which is offered as dying declarations is inadmissible as such is material, and it is error to refuse a continuance to allow a party to procure such testimony. Wyatt v. Com., 1 S. W. 196, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 55.

Where an absent witness' testimony on a former hearing was such that accused would probably not have introduced him had he been present, and it was not suggested that he would testify differently, it was not error to refuse a continuance because of his absence. *Williams v. (bb) Of Defendant's Previous Statements. It is not error to refuse a continuance requested on behalf of defendant to procure an absent witness whose testimony would be contradictory of the testimony or declarations of defendant.⁷⁸

bb. Cumulative Evidence—(aa) Rule Stated. Generally speaking it is not error to refuse a continuance when the evidence sought to be introduced by the absent witnesses is merely cumulative;⁷⁹ and especially is this true where such evidence does not conflict with the state's theory of the guilt of the accused,⁸⁰ and where the continuance is asked for the second time.⁸¹ This is not, however, an absolute criterion by which the court should be governed, and where the evidence is important and material it may in some instances be error to refuse a continuance notwithstanding the fact that it is cumulative,⁸² especially where no prior continuance has been requested.⁸³

(bb) Rule Does Not Apply to Corroborative Testimony. The rule that a continuance will not be granted for the purpose of procuring cumulative evidence does not apply to the procurement of evidence merely corroborative of defendant's testimony, as such evidence is clearly material, and its absence is likely to work an injury to his rights.⁸⁴

84. People v. Ah Lee Doon, 97 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 933; Ransbottom v. State, 144 Ind. 250, 43 N. E. 218 (holding that the fact that defendant knew the facts proposed to be proven as well as the witness on account of whose absence a continuance was asked was

been at the place of the crime, is material; and a refusal to continue the case to procure such testimony is reversible error if it does not appear that such testimony is untrue, and the defense of an alibi could not be successfully established without such testimony, due diligence being shown; ⁸⁵ and this is especially true where the evidence on the part of the state is circumstantial. ⁸⁶ The fact that defendant has made affidavit of an intent to produce certain witnesses to establish the defense of an alibi, and whom, when produced, he does not place upon the stand, does not preclude him from demanding a continuance to obtain witnesses who will unquestionably prove for him an alibi. ⁸⁷ Nor will the fact that the evidence sought to be offered in proof of the defense of an alibi is cumulative justify the court in refusing a continuance to procure it. ⁸⁸ The evidence sought to be introduced must, however, account for the presence of the defendant at the time of the actual commission of the offense; ⁸⁹ and if there is still a sufficient time left unaccounted for to have enabled defendant to commit the crime a refusal to continue is not error. ⁹⁰ So too the court has a right to look at the other facts clearly shown in the case, and judge whether or not there is a likelihood or possibility of the truthfulness of the evidence of an alibi, even if presented. ⁹¹ Although it has been said that where the affidavit of a witness for defendant states absolutely that he will testify to facts establishing the defense of an alibi, to assume the prerogative of saying that such testimony is not probably true would not only usurp the functions of the jury, but would announce in addition that the absent witness had probably committed perjury. ⁹²

dd. Evidence of Accused's Character. Evidence as to the character of the accused is usually held by the courts not to be of such materiality as to constitute error in a refusal to grant a continuance for the purpose of procuring testimony of such character. ⁹³

ing him to be of such unsound mind as to be incapable of committing such an offense, a continuance should be granted.⁹⁴ The materiality of such evidence must, however, clearly appear by the application, and where there is no claim of mental aberration or lasting or temporary insanity at the time of the commission of the offense, or that the plea of insanity will be introduced, a refusal to continue is not error;⁹⁵ nor will a continuance be granted where it is admitted that defendant can clearly distinguish between right and wrong.⁹⁶

ff. Evidence of Self-Defense. Where due diligence has been shown to procure absent witnesses it is error to refuse a continuance to procure witnesses whose testimony concerning alleged threats or actions of the injured or deceased party would be material to a defendant who seeks to defend on the ground of self-defense.⁹⁷ The motion for continuance to procure testimony of this character must, however, show the relevancy and materiality of the same;⁹⁸ hence if there is not the slightest pretense of self-defense legitimately raised by the facts,⁹⁹ as where for instance the defense is accidental homicide,¹ or the threats are not of sufficiently grave a nature² or have not been communicated to defendant³ or it appears that even though threats were made, accused had no fear of deceased,⁴ it will not be error to refuse a continuance. So too in some jurisdictions it is necessary that defendant show that the deceased party manifested some intention to execute his threats at the time of the homicide.⁵

gg. Hearsay Evidence. In the application of this rule it is held that a continuance should not be granted to procure witnesses whose evidence would be objectionable as hearsay.⁶

hh. Impeaching Testimony. Where due diligence has been shown to procure the attendance of impeaching witnesses, and the evidence sought to be impeached by them is material, a refusal to grant a continuance to procure their attendance is error;⁷ but generally speaking evidence for which a continuance will be granted must directly touch the issue of guilt or innocence of the accused; and a continuance will not ordinarily be granted merely to secure the attendance of impeaching witnesses;⁸ and especially is this true where it is not certain that the witness sought to be impeached will testify at the trial.⁹

ii. Negative Testimony. It is not error to refuse a continuance to obtain the testimony of a witness which is of a negative character, and states conclusions of law rather than of fact.¹⁰

(2) PROBABILITY OF TRUTH. While it is not the province of the court to usurp the province of the jury by passing upon the credibility of witnesses, yet where it appears improbable that a witness will swear to the facts stated in the application for a continuance, or where, in view of the written matter contained in the record of the case,¹¹ the overwhelming evidence,¹² or the uncontroverted facts,¹³ it is altogether probable that such testimony, if presented, would be untrue, a continuance should be refused.¹⁴ The falsity of such testimony must, however,

Original as distinguished from impeaching testimony.—Upon a trial for rape, where the age of the prosecutrix is in dispute, testimony that she had called the attention of a witness to the record of her birth in the family bible, which showed her to be over fifteen years of age, and that the mother of the prosecutrix represented her to have been born on a day named, which would make her over fifteen years of age, is original and not impeaching testimony. *Tull v. appear clearly probable,¹⁵ and the court will grant a new trial upon the ground of the absence of witnesses with greater liberality when the evidence in the case is all presumptive than where the guilt of the accused is more manifest.¹⁶

(3) PROBABILITY OF AFFECTING RESULT. It is also a principle well recognized by the courts that where the evidence sought to be introduced, although perhaps material, would nevertheless, in view of the established facts, not have probably influenced the finding of the jury, a refusal to grant the continuance will not be considered error.¹⁷

(B) Compliance With Statutory Provisions. A statute, limiting the number of witnesses in criminal cases to a certain number on each side, unless by formal application it is made to appear that an additional number is required to meet the ends of justice, must be complied with to entitle the defendant to a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses.¹⁸

(c) Should Be the Only Witnesses Familiar With Facts. It is also well established that the courts will not consider it an abuse of discretion to refuse a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses, where it appears that the facts sought to be proved by them could be proved by other witnesses present,¹⁹ or whose presence could probably have been secured.²⁰ It has, however, been held that, inasmuch as a defendant is entitled to any number of witnesses within reason, a refusal to grant a continuance because of an absent witness merely on the

It is only in case the evidence adduced at the trial would impress this court with the conviction, not merely that the defendant might have in all probability been prejudiced in his rights by the denial of such continuance, but that it was reasonably probable that if the absent witness had been present and testified before the jury a different result would have been reached by them."

ground that there were other witnesses to the difficulty is error, where it appears that the testimony of the absent witness is material and important.²¹

(d) Probability of Procuring Witness. It is also well settled that a refusal to grant a continuance will not be considered an abuse of discretion where the witness is beyond the jurisdiction or compulsory process of the court, or his whereabouts is unknown, and there is no reasonable certainty of the party asking the continuance being able to produce such witness at the next term;²² and the same rule applies where a witness is so unwell or infirm that there is no reasonable expectation of being able to procure his attendance.²³ Where, however, the affidavit for a continuance conforms to the statutory requirements, the non-residence of the witness does not of itself justify the court in refusing a continuance where the statute provides for obtaining testimony by deposition;²⁴ although it is otherwise if defendant knew a sufficient length of time before the trial to have secured such deposition that the witness was beyond the reach of a subpoena,²⁵ or was too unwell to attend.²⁶ But the question is not merely whether or not the court will be able to coerce or enforce the attendance of the absent witness; if there is reasonable ground to believe that such witness will be had by a continuance it should be granted, although he be without the state,²⁷ or in a very infirm or

Where the witness is a fugitive from justice, continuances should not be granted on the vague hypothesis that perhaps at some indefinite time in the future such fugitive may be secured, as it is essential in criminal as well as civil matters that there should be an end to litigation. Morris v. Com., 11 S. W. 295, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 1004; State v. Baum, 51 La. Ann. 1112, 26 So. 67; Harris v. State, 8 Tex. App. 90. See also People v. Cleveland, 49 Cal. 577; Maloney v. State, (Tex. It has, however, been held that in a prosecution for murder, where defendant expected to prove by an absent witness that he (the witness) did the killing, the continuance should not be denied on the ground alone that it is improbable that such absent witness would subject himself to arrest and give evidence, showing his own guilt, of the offense. *State v. unwell condition.²⁸ So too if defendant, by relying on the promise of a witness to attend who resides outside the jurisdiction of the court, omits to take his deposition, a continuance should, upon the failure of such witness to appear, ordinarily be granted.²⁹

b. Record Evidence or Depositions. An application for a continuance to procure record evidence or depositions rests substantially on the same merits as when made because of the absence of witnesses; the granting is therefore often largely in the discretion of the court,³⁰ and a showing of due diligence is necessary;³¹ but where a party has fulfilled all legal requirements, a refusal to grant a continuance to enable him to procure such evidence is error.³²

c. Admissions of Absent Testimony to Prevent Continuances—(i) RIGHT TO MAKE. In a few earlier cases it was held that the system of criminal jurisprudence requires the presence of the witnesses both for and against an accused, and that the state could not, by any admission whatever, preclude a defendant from his right of having the witnesses personally present at the trial;³³ but the practice at present, although subject to different limitations in different jurisdictions, is to allow such admissions.³⁴

(ii) NECESSITY OF MAKING. Statutes providing for the granting of continuances, where the adverse party will admit that the facts to which it is alleged the absent witness will swear shall be read as his actual testimony, are permissive only, and an accused cannot be compelled to give his consent to such admission and be forced to trial.³⁵

(iii) CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTES—(A) In General. The constitutionality of the statutes regulating admissions has been attacked on various grounds,³⁶ and it of course goes without saying that no convenience of the court

Necessity of application for commission to procure deposition.—Under N. D. Rev. Codes, §§ 8385, 8389, which prescribes the method of obtaining the depositions of non-resident witnesses, an application for a continuance or postponement to take such non-resident witness' testimony will not be granted unless an application for a commission to procure the testimony as provided by statute is at the same time requested. State v. Murphy, 9 N. D. 175, 82 N. W. 738.

33. Dominges v. State, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 475, 45 Am. Dec. 315; Goodman v. State, Meigs (Tenn.) 195, 197, where the court said: "It were needless to urge upon practical and enlightened minds the difference, in point of legitimate effect, between the personal presence of candid and respectable witnesses who testify to facts in their detail, ramification, and bearing, and the general admission of these by an attorney-general, little impressing, perhaps, the minds of the jury, and constituting, as to its extent and bearing, a fruitful source of difficulty and dispute. It were needless to urge how such a practice would tempt the unfortunate defendant, if he must forego the advantage of the personal attendance of his witnesses, to seek an undue equivalent by amplifying, at the hazard of perjury, the statement in his affidavit, so as to obtain the broadest possible admission from the State. In every view, therefore, as it regards the rights of the defendant, and the safe, equal, and pure administration of justice, the practice referred to is improper and erroneous." See also Taylor v. Com., 9 Ky. L. Rep. 316; People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 369, where, although the admission was received, it is said that the practice of requiring concessions in such cases is novel; and, the court apprehends, not well calculated to advance justice.

Sufficiency of admission.—An admission need not be made in the exact language of the statute. Toliver v. Com., 104 Ky. 760, 47 S. W. 1082, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 906. See also State v. Schoonover, 21 Ind. App. 520, 52 N. E. 779, holding that where a prosecutor makes a statement of what facts an absent witness will testify to, and defendant merely admits the "statement," such admission must, in the light of the statutes of that state governing the same, be considered an admission of the truth of such statement; and the defendant cannot deny the same.

or condition of the docket of the cases for trial or statutory enactment can authorize the denial of any of the rights guaranteed to a party by the constitution of the state³⁷ or of the United States.³⁸

(B) Particular Guaranties — (1) RIGHT TO FACE WITNESSES. The provisions found in the various state constitutions providing that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to meet the witnesses face to face applies only to witnesses against him, and therefore are in no way infringed by an admission;³⁹ and, it is held, the accused may waive his right to face the adverse witnesses.⁴⁰

(2) RIGHT TO COMPULSORY PROCESS. The constitutional guaranty to an accused of the right of compulsory process for the attendance of his witnesses should not be trifled with or made a dead letter;⁴¹ and no rule of practice or statute can be applied or so interpreted as to contravene this guaranty⁴² or deny the right to such process, and a reasonable time for its service or execution.⁴³ Where, because of the sickness of the witness,⁴⁴ or his absence outside the jurisdiction of the court,⁴⁵ his presence could not, by compulsory process, be enforced, no question can arise. But under other circumstances the courts are not in accord as to just when a statute contravenes this guaranty. Where a party, although realizing the necessity of the same, has asked for no compulsory process,⁴⁶ or fails to disclose what he expects to prove by absent witnesses,⁴⁷ or where the state, by virtue of a statute, has granted the defendant every compulsory process at its command, which has been unavailingly employed by defendant to compel their attendance, a refusal to continue the cause upon an admission on the part of the state has been held, upon able judicial reasoning, not to be a denial of one's constitutional right.⁴⁸

(IV) NATURE OF ADMISSION REQUIRED — (A) In General — (1) AS TESTIMONY ONLY. While it has been held that in the absence of express affirmative

38. State v. Berkley, 92 Mo. 41, 52, 4 S. W. 24, where Sherwood and Brace, JJ., held that a statute providing that, upon the application of a defendant in a criminal case for a continuance, the state might prevent such continuance by consenting that the facts set out in an application or affidavit for the continuance are what the witness, if present, would testify to, was in conflict with section 1, of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States, the former judge saying: "Here are two defendants in the same court, both on trial for their lives; both make equally meritorious applications for a continuance. In one case, the prosecuting attorney graciously waives the interposition of his veto, and the trial court is consequently allowed to exercise its ordinary judicial discretion, and the grounds therefor being ample, the continuance goes, and that defendant secures, as a matter of favor, what belongs to him as a home-born constitutional right — the attendance of his witnesses. In the other case, the prosecuting attorney does veto the application; does overrule the judicial discretion of the court; does override the constitutional right of the defendant; and so the latter is forced into a trial on whose result his life depends, with nothing better than a piece of paper, on which is written something which, on its face, does not bear even so much probative force as hearsay testimony."

In Missouri, however, by a later interpretation, such a statute has, in one jurisdiction, by a divided court, been held unconstitutional. State v. Berkley, 92 Mo. 41, 4 S. W. 24 [followed in State v. Dyke, 96 Mo. 298, 9 S. W. 925; State v. Bryant, 93 Mo. 273, 6 S. W. 102].

enactment a statute providing for the reception of admissions to prevent continuances in civil cases does not apply to criminal actions,⁴⁹ in some jurisdictions, either by virtue of such enactment or by judicial interpretation, such provisions have been held applicable to criminal procedure, and in many such jurisdictions an admission only that the absent witness would testify as alleged is required.⁵⁰ So too it has been held where no statutes applicable to continuances in either civil or criminal cases have been enacted, that where the adverse party admits the alleged testimony of the absent witness as evidence only, the matter then rests in the discretion of the court;⁵¹ and many cases, not apparently resting on any specific statutory enactment, have held that the admission of the testimony which it is alleged the absent witness will give need be only as evidence and not as uncontrovertible.⁵²

(2) AS ABSOLUTELY TRUE. Inasmuch, however, as the testimony of a witness delivered ore tenus could not possibly do more than establish the absolute truth of his statement, the courts, having in view the speedy, as well as the fair, administration of justice, hold that if the adverse party will admit as absolutely true the facts to which it is alleged the absent party will swear, it cannot be held that one is thereby detrimentally deprived of his witness;⁵³ and a continuance should, upon an admission of this nature, be denied.⁵⁴ But while there are some jurisdictions holding to the contrary,⁵⁵ and while in others there are conflicting decisions, yet it may be said, by perhaps the weight of authority, that in the absence of a statute to the contrary, an admission of the absolute and unchallenged verity of such testimony is required.⁵⁶

could perhaps be produced, it is agreed that where the witness is not subject to compulsory process, a party who is permitted to have the benefit of his testimony in language suggested or employed by himself without subjection to the test of a cross-examination is in no way prejudiced; and an admission of the same as testimony only is all that should be required.⁵⁷

(c) Under Express Criminal Statute. The fact that, in a jurisdiction where the court requires an admission of the absolute truth of the facts to which it was held an absent witness would testify, to prevent a continuance or postponement, an unscrupulous criminal often might, by the aid of an ingenious counsel, prolong or indefinitely delay the trial of his cause, or else compel the state to admit facts for the purpose of a trial which in effect would be equivalent to his acquittal, has induced the enactment, in some states, of provisions especially applicable to the granting of continuances in criminal cases.⁵⁸ These provisions in some states require the admission of the truth of the testimony of the absent witness to prevent a continuance at the same term at which the indictment was rendered,⁵⁹ but leave it to the discretion of the court as to whether or not the alleged absent testimony shall be admitted as truth or as evidence only when a continuance is asked at a term subsequent to the one at which the indictment was found.⁶⁰

(v) CONTRADICTION OF ADMISSION. Where the absolute truth of an alleged witness' testimony is required to be admitted, such testimony cannot of course be contradicted or impeached,⁶¹ but evidence competent for other purposes and not introduced for the purpose of contradiction may be admitted, although it incidentally tends to contradict facts admitted to be true.⁶² Where the statement is admitted as testimony only, it may of course be impeached on certain grounds;⁶³

63. Where the prosecution consents that the affidavit for a continuance may be read as a deposition of the absent witness, such affidavit cannot be impeached on the ground that the defendant might with reasonable diligence have procured the attendance of the witness or taken his deposition, that he had good reason to believe that if the witness would so testify the testimony would be untrue, or that there is no such person in existence as the one named in the affidavit. Inasmuch as to permit the defendant's belief as to what the absent witness would testify to if present, or the actual existence of such witness, to be put in issue would bring new and independent matters before the court for trial which would have the effect to extend the testimony outside of the points in issue and would require defendant to be prepared to answer to particular facts of which he had no notice. So too if a party knowingly makes a false and corrupt affidavit to gain further time he can be duly convicted of perjury; but it is not proper to thus try a party for perjury when he is charged with some other offense. State v. Roark, 23 Kan. 147.

The supposed absent witness may be introduced personally to impeach and contradict the facts to which it is alleged he will testify, where the presence of such witness can be produced by the party during the trial. Edmonds v. State, 34 Ark. 720; State v. Mann, 83 Mo. 589.

but this can be done only when the rules for the introduction of rebutting testimony can be and are observed.⁶⁴

(VI) USE OF ADMISSION ON SUBSEQUENT TRIAL. Where a continuance is obviated by an admission by the adverse party of the alleged testimony of an absent witness, and the trial results in a disagreement, such admission, it has been held, must be again received if the accused is again placed on trial at the same term;⁶⁵ but where the cause is not determined during the term at which the admission is made, as the applicant is thus afforded a chance to obtain such witnesses or their testimony, the admission cannot be used as a matter of right at a subsequent term.⁶⁶

(VII) ARRIVAL OF WITNESS BEFORE CLOSE OF TRIAL. Where a statement of the testimony of a witness has been admitted, owing to his absence, the court may, upon his appearance, before the close of the introduction of the testimony, allow the witness himself to be placed upon the stand;⁶⁷ and where this proceeding is asked by one of the parties it is a wise exercise of discretion on the part of the court to do so.⁶⁸

(VIII) SCOPE OF ADMISSION. A party cannot, after obviating a continuance, by admitting the affidavit or application as evidence of the absent witness, introduce only a portion of the same to the jury, as the accused is entitled to have it considered in its entirety.⁶⁹ So too the admission must be coextensive with the material and competent part of the alleged absent testimony;⁷⁰ but a party cannot, by embodying improper or irrelevant matter in his affidavit, require his adversary in order to avoid a continuance to admit the same.⁷¹ Hence an admission will be understood as contemplating only material and relevant testimony,⁷² and not matter which, were the witness present in person, would be inadmissible.⁷³ Nor need an admission be of the testimony of alleged absent witnesses other than those who have been summoned or who may possibly be secured.⁷⁴

3. AGREEMENT OF COUNSEL. The mere agreement of counsel to continue a cause does not require the court to grant a continuance.⁷⁵

4. CONTAGIOUS DISEASE OF WITNESS. It has been held a sufficient ground for a continuance that the material witnesses had become afflicted with a contagious disease so that their attendance at the trial would be dangerous to the public.⁷⁶

5. INCOMPETENCY OF WITNESS TO TAKE OATH. Where the incompetency of a material witness to take an oath arises from ignorance due to a neglect of instruction, it has been held proper to grant a continuance until such witness can be instructed in its nature and obligation;⁷⁷ but where the infirmity arises from no neglect, as where the witness was too young to have been taught, it has been doubted whether it is the proper procedure to postpone the trial.⁷⁸

74. Were the rule otherwise, an applicant for a continuance might merely by inserting in his motion the names of fictitious witnesses or persons whom the sheriff could not serve present an array of evidence for which there was in reality no foundation whatever, and thus secure a continuance by fraud. State v. Daniels, 49 La. Ann. 954, 22 So. 415.

75. The court may refuse to ratify such an agreement, and, unless some legal reason is shown whereby an injustice has been done, such action is not error. Keaton v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1900) 57 S. W. 1125.

6. INTOXICATION OF WITNESS. Where a witness, whose evidence is very material to, and would likely influence the result of, the trial is, on account of intoxication, incapacitated from testifying at the time he is called, the court should grant a postponement or continuance until the witness is sober.⁷⁹

7. ILLNESS OR MENTAL INCAPACITY OF ACCUSED. A request for a continuance on the ground of illness or temporary mental aberration⁸⁰ is addressed largely to the discretion of the court.⁸¹ The exercise of such discretion will not be held to be abused where the court determines his alleged physical disability or illness by a personal inspection or examination⁸² or by an examination of physicians as to the ability of the accused to undergo the probable excitement and nervous strain of a trial,⁸³ even though a physician certifies that accused is in a bad nervous and physical condition.⁸⁴ Nor need the court accept the statement of a single physician, but may appoint a number to examine him, and act upon their majority report,⁸⁵ or place him in charge of a committee of physicians and act upon their report.⁸⁶ The mere fact that defendant is very excitable, whether this is occasioned by his state of health or otherwise, is not sufficient ground for a continuance,⁸⁷ and where the defendant occasions his condition or temporary absence by the voluntary use of intoxicating liquor it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse a continuance.⁸⁸ But neither the statutes nor the common law will permit the trial or punishment of an insane person,⁸⁹ and if at the time of trial there is reason to believe the accused insane, his condition should be investigated by a jury, and if he is found to be insane, the trial should be continued until he regains his sanity.⁹⁰

8. INSUFFICIENT PREPARATION FOR TRIAL — a. On Part of Counsel. A request for a continuance on the ground that counsel has not had a reasonable time to prepare a defense is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, to be exercised of course upon a consideration of the intricacy of the law or other facts and circumstances involved, and the action of the court is not a favored ground for reversal.⁹¹ It is essential that the accused show no lack of diligence in endeavor-the court expressly said that it would lay down no general rule, as there might be cases of this nature where a postponement would be proper.

80. The temporary insanity complained of must be clearly proved, and where the physician called upon to prove this condition testifies that in negro lingo the defendant was "playing possum" it is no abuse of discretion to proceed with the trial. Especially is this true where the defendant, as soon as the motion was overruled, recovered his mental equilibrium and was vigilant and ready in prompting his counsel throughout the trial. *State v. A person is deemed sane when his memory is unimpaired and he is capable of comprehending his own condition in reference to his trial and the crime of which he is charged, and in possession of every faculty requisite to conducting a rational defense against the accusation; although he may be deranged on other subjects, or suffering from a chronic and latent disease of the brain which, under the excitement of intoxicating drink or other conditions or circumstances, may lead him to irrational acts. In re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 330, 61 Pac. 1120, 50 L. ing to employ counsel,⁹² and the affidavit of want of sufficient time comes with more grace from the counsel than from the accused himself.⁹³ So too the excuse that the counsel have been so busily engaged in other professional matters that they have been unable to devote the proper time to the case in question is not received with favor where defendant employs his own counsel,⁹⁴ although the same reasons are inapplicable where counsel is appointed by the court, and greater indulgence should be allowed.⁹⁵ But where no lack of diligence is shown, either on the part of the accused or his counsel, it is reversible error to refuse to grant a continuance where it is clear that counsel have had insufficient time to investigate and examine the law applicable to the case.⁹⁶

b. On Part of Accused. Where it is clear that the prisoner has not had a reasonable opportunity between the date of the offense and that of the trial to procure witnesses and prepare his defense a continuance should be granted;⁹⁷ but it must appear that lack of preparation did not arise from defendant's own laches.⁹⁸ So too a trial on a second indictment for the same offense will not be continued,

What constitutes reasonable time is dependent upon the nature of the offense, the facilities for procuring interviews with attorneys, and the number thereof necessary to be interviewed. Where the homicide was admitted and the only question involved was the degree of the offense, and all the witnesses were present in court it was held not to be an abuse of discretion to refuse a continuance where counsel were assigned on Monday and the trial set for the following Wednesday. Walton v. State, 79 Ga. 446, 5 S. E. 203. See also Com. v. Buccieri, 153 Pa. St. 535, 26 Atl. 228, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 113, where it was held that it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse a continuance where the senior counsel for the defendant was assigned more than a month before the trial, the junior counsel five days before, and the power to compel the attendance of witnesses being easily and readily obtained.

Where the court was compelled to commit defendant's counsel for contempt, by reason of such counsel's intoxication, an adjournment for a reasonable time thereafter to allow other counsel to become familiar with the facts of the case is all that defendant has a right to claim, and a continuance is properly denied. People v. Warren, 130 Cal. 678, 63 Pac. 87.

the first indictment having been found a sufficient time previously.⁹⁹ Nor will a second trial, the jury having disagreed in the first,¹⁰⁰ be continued. The mere fact that the accused has been in jail in another county should not excuse him from preparing his defense.¹⁰¹

9. PUBLIC EXCITEMENT AND PREJUDICE. It has been held that the clear existence of an excited state of the public mind against the accused should entitle him to a continuance until there has been a reasonable time for the excitement to subside and the mind of the community to become tranquilized.¹⁰² Other courts regard this as very material matter to be shown in an application for a change of venue, but do not consider it sufficient ground for a continuance;¹ and under a statute disqualifying as a juror any one who, from having seen the crime committed, has formed or expressed any opinion as to the prisoner's guilt or innocence, who has any prejudice or bias against him, or who is not perfectly impartial between the state and prisoner, it has been repeatedly held that public excitement alone was not a sufficient ground;² although under such a statute if the court is in doubt as to the sufficiency of other grounds on which the continuance is claimed, this may well be considered as turning the scale in favor of granting the same.³ In any event such excitement must be such that its natural tendency would be to intimidate or swerve the jury;⁴ and as the court in which the cause is pending can much better determine the propriety of a postponement on this ground than the appellate court, it requires a very strong showing to induce the upper court to interfere.⁵

10. SURPRISE — a. In General. Where it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the applicant for a continuance is so taken by surprise by some unexpected occurrence or the introduction of unexpected testimony which, by reasonable diligence he could not have anticipated, that a fair trial cannot be had

A reasonable time in which it may fairly be assumed that the public excitement has sufficiently abated depends of course upon the heinousness of the offense committed and the susceptibility of the public mind to undue excitement upon the commission of such offenses. Two years would seem to be clearly a sufficient time (Woolfolk v. State, 85 Ga. 69, 11 S. E. 814); and in several cases it has been held that the judge did not abuse his discretion in assuming that the public prejudice had become sufficiently lulled after the expiration of five months after the commission of the offense (Revel v. State, 26 Ga. 275; Poole v. State, 18 Ga. 567; Roberts v. State, 14 Ga. 8, 58 Am. Dec. 528).

"Public excitement," within the legal meaning of that term, means more than the excitement which is a natural consequence of criminal conduct, as the latter is merely a fair expression of public sentiment. Com. v. Carson, 1 Wheel. Crim. (N. Y.) 487.

a continuance or postponement should be granted;⁶ but it is not error to refuse a continuance on the ground of surprise at the introduction of evidence, when the defendant should, from the nature of the case, naturally expect or anticipate the evidence, or when by law he is chargeable with knowledge that such evidence would be properly competent.⁷

b. What May Constitute — (i) ABSENCE OF EXPECTED WITNESS. Where defendant is surprised by the absence of a witness who had been present during the trial, or whom he had every reason to expect would be present, the proper procedure is not to urge the matter as ground for a new trial, but to move the court for a postponement or continuance,⁸ an unadvised refusal of which by the court may constitute error.⁹ So too this course should be pursued where the unexpected absence of the witness is attributable to the error of a ministerial officer.¹⁰

(ii) INTRODUCTION OF UNEXPECTED WITNESSES. Where a defendant is surprised by the introduction of witnesses whose names were not indorsed on the information at the time of filing, a continuance should be granted, allowing him time and opportunity to examine their character and credibility and prepare to meet their testimony;¹¹ but where there is no fraud or deception practised on a defendant, and he goes to trial under the impression that the principal witness for the state will not be present to testify against him, the introduction of such witness will not entitle him to a continuance.¹²

(iii) UNEXPECTED TESTIMONY OF STATE'S WITNESSES. Where, on a trial, witnesses for the state testify to facts or circumstances which, from the nature of the case, are wholly unexpected by defendant, or in actual or apparent contradiction to their former testimony, thereby taking defendant by surprise, a postponement or continuance sufficient to procure disproving evidence should be granted;¹³ but it has been held that defendant must disclose the manner in which he expects to meet the new phase of the evidence;¹⁴ nor will a continuance be granted where the applicant has made no effort to ascertain what the probable testimony of such witness would be.¹⁵

(iv) UNEXPECTED TESTIMONY OF DEFENDANT'S WITNESSES. The defendant in a criminal case cannot as a rule claim a continuance on the ground that he was surprised by the testimony offered or withheld by his own witnesses,¹⁶

Com.*, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 407 (holding also that the fact that a witness for the accused who had been sworn had while on the stand made admissions affecting his own credibility, and before he could be recalled and sworn had fled, was no ground for discharging the jury and continuing the case).

although by virtue of statutory provisions the rule in some jurisdictions would appear to be otherwise.¹⁷

(v) UNEXPECTED WITHDRAWAL OF COUNSEL. Where the leading or material counsel for a defendant suddenly withdraws from the case during the trial, it is error to refuse a continuance to give the new counsel time to prepare the defense.¹⁸

C. As Affected by Number of Continuances Granted. It has been said that the same degree of promptness and diligence in preparing for trial should not be required of the defendant at the term to which the indictment is returned as at a subsequent term after a continuance has been granted;¹⁹ and while in the absence of statute a definite distinction is rarely declared by the courts between a showing necessary to be made for a subsequent continuance and that of the first, it is clear from the phraseology often employed that successive continuances are not regarded with favor.²⁰ A court will rarely, if ever, tolerate two applications on the same grounds at the same term,²¹ although they may be differently stated;²² and where a continuance has been refused, another motion at the same term will not be entertained unless upon material facts not existing at the time the former was made, or upon facts which, if existing, it is clear were not, and by the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have been, known at such time.²³

D. Diligence an Essential Element to Sufficiency of Ground—1. IN GENERAL. The courts, whose duty it is to administer justice both on behalf of the state as well as of the accused, steadfastly refuse to allow the negligence or passiveness of either of the parties to a criminal action to delay criminal justice, and will refuse a continuance to procure evidence of witnesses no matter how material or important it may be, unless it is shown that the applicant has used due diligence to procure such testimony.²⁴ And this rule is adhered to with strictness where the testimony sought does not, in the light of the record and preponder-

Where there is no special statutory provision for a third continuance to enable the prisoner to get witnesses the granting of such continuance is within the discretion of the court. Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713.

ance of evidence adduced, appear to be probably true,²⁵ or where it does not appear that the witness can probably be secured if the trial is continued,²⁶ or that his testimony could affect the verdict.²⁷ The accused, however, must be accorded all reasonable facilities in the preparation of his defense,²⁸ and, in extreme cases, where the evidence sought to be adduced is very material to defendant, it has been held that he should be allowed a continuance notwithstanding the fact that he has failed in a measure to exercise due diligence.²⁹

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES — a. In General. What constitutes due diligence must of course depend upon the material and important facts and circumstances of each particular case; no general rule can be laid down or formulated by which the court may be governed; the proximity of the witness, his facilities for travel, and the facilities of communicating with him must be considered,³⁰ as well as the

Scott*, 44 Iowa 93 (where the offense of which the defendant was accused having been committed on board a Mississippi river steamer, the application for a continuance showed with clearness that two of defendant's witnesses were boatmen, ordinarily plying between St. Louis and length of time accused has had the benefit of counsel⁸¹ or the length of time he has been released on bail.⁸² Due diligence means, however, not only a timely effort to obtain testimony after its existence is known or discovered, but also diligence in discovering the existence of such testimony,⁸³ or the actual residence or location of witnesses known to possess a knowledge of material facts.⁸⁴ If an accused, by permission of the court, refuses to send an officer thereof after an absent witness,⁸⁵ does not avail himself of an opportunity to put his witnesses under a recognition,⁸⁶ has in open court discharged his witnesses,⁸⁷ or has failed to avail himself of a continuance granted for the purpose of securing testimony of absent witnesses,⁸⁸ a continuance will not be granted. So too due diligence requires that a defendant who is informed of the intended departure of a witness shall make an effort to induce him to remain or to secure his testimony by deposition.⁸⁹

b. Employment of Statutory Process—(1) IN GENERAL—(A) Necessity of—(1) IN GENERAL. It is incumbent upon a party who seeks a continuance on account of the absence of witnesses or evidence to show that he had used the ordinary means provided by statute to obtain such witnesses or their testimony where such means would be effectual.⁴⁰ Hence a continuance will be denied if, points below it on the river, and that effort had been made to locate them by writing to them at St. Louis, New Orleans, and intermediate points, it was held that sufficient diligence was thereby shown to entitle defendant to a continuance). On the other hand, where the facilities for travel between the place of trial and the residence of the witness is such that he could have easily arrived, the continuance will not be granted, in the absence of special extenuating circumstances, on account of his absence. Murphy v. State, 6 Ind. 490; Drye v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1900) 55 S. W. 65.

31. State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300, 4 S. W. 931, holding that where counsel had been appointed six months previous to the time of trial, but nothing had been done to ascertain the line of defense or prepare therefor, a continuance is properly refused.

32. Price v. State, 57 Ark. 165, 20 S. W. 1091, holding that a refusal of continuance was not error where it appeared that defendant had had eight months in which to prepare for trial after having been released on bail, and that he had made no effort to secure the testimony of other persons who could in all probability testify to facts sought to be adduced from the witness to secure whose presence the continuance was asked.

The forfeiture of a bail-bond does not deprive an accused of the right to have his witnesses; and where the witnesses were present when the case was called and before the forfeiture, but had been discharged by the court, a continuance should have been granted to allow the defendant opportunity to secure their attendance again. *Ballard v. That such witnesses are not residents of the state or county is considered in determining what constitutes diligence in locating their whereabouts. State v. Metcalf, 17 Mont. 417, 43 Pac. 182; Lancaster v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1895) 31 S. W. 515. See also Massey v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1897) 40 S. W. 726.

35. Phillips v. State, 95 Ga. 478, 20 S. E. 270; State v. Gray, 19 Nev. 212, 8 Pac. 456. See also Roberts v. State, (Tex. 1891) 16 S. W. 255, holding that it was not error to refuse a continuance on account of an absent witness, where an officer of the court was willing to go after her, but on request of defendant's attorney did not do so, because such witness was acting as a nurse for certain sick children, and that there was no one else to care for them, in the absence of evidence of any efforts to procure others to so act in her place.

37. Robson v. State, 83 Ga. 166, 9 S. E. 610. See, however, State v. Miller, 65 Iowa 60, 21 N. W. 181, holding that a continuance was properly granted where witnesses had been excused by the prosecution at the close of the first trial of the case, because the prosecutor in view of the public interest in the case believed that a jury for a second trial at the same term would be difficult to obtain, and that therefore the case would not be again called for that term.

where the witness is without the state, no interrogatories are applied for,⁴¹ or if within the state no subpoena or process is sued out;⁴² although it has been held that where defendant's wife is an important witness in his behalf, a continuance should not be refused merely because she was not subpoenaed, where it appears that she was present, and that but a short time before she was called upon to testify she had been taken suddenly sick.⁴³

(2) NATURE OF PROCESS. Inasmuch as a process for collecting a fine is not the means provided by statute to be used to secure the attendance of witnesses, the fact that a capias pro fine has been awarded against a defaulting witness does not excuse a party from suing out new process for him.⁴⁴

(B) Time of Suing Out—(1) IN GENERAL. It must affirmatively appear⁴⁵ in the application for a continuance that the defendant himself⁴⁶ has been guilty of no laches in suing out process for his witnesses, as any unnecessary delay will be fatal.⁴⁷ The determination of what should be considered unnecessary delay must of course be determined by the facts involved in the particular case; generally speaking, the defendant must make active research and effort to secure his witnesses immediately after he is indicted or the information is filed against him. He cannot wait until a short time before trial to issue process for them.⁴⁸ So too

48. In the absence of sufficient excuse for the delay, it is not sufficient diligence to sue out process on the day of trial (Boyle v. People, 4 Colo. 176, 34 Am. Rep. 76; Harris v. State, 97 Ga. 408, 24 S. E. 145; State v. Barker, 43 Kan. 262, 23 Pac. 575; State v. Venables, 40 La. Ann. 215, 3 So. 727; Gastón v. State, 11 Tex. App. 143; In re Mull, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 695); or until the term during which the trial will be held (Blackmore v. State, (Ark. 1888) 8 S. W. 940; Wells v. State, (Ark. 1888) 8 S. W. 826; Washington v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 154, 32 S. W. 693; Vaden v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1894) 25 S. W. 777). The length of time before trial which would constitute diligence in suing out the process is dependent of course upon the time elapsing after a defendant learns of the date of the trial, the distance of his witnesses, and facilities for serving process at his command. Thus it has been held that a party suing out process only a few days before the trial, he having been indicted four months previously (Davids v. People, 192 Ill. 176, 61 N. E. 537); ten days before trial, where defendant knows for two months when his trial will occur (State v. Kindred, 148 Mo. 270, 49 S. W. 845); one day before trial, defendant knowing the date of trial ten days previous (State v. Thompson, 132 Mo. 301, 34 S. W. 31); one day before trial, he having been arrested for over a year (Roberts v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1899) 51 S. W. 383); two and one-half months after indictment and only fifteen days before trial (Underwood v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. 193, 41 S. W. 618); five days before the court convened, he having been delays of this nature are critically viewed where the applicant has been accorded a previous continuance;⁴⁹ but the issuance of subpoenas the day one is arrested,⁵⁰ or as soon as he can learn who the material witnesses are after the timely procurement of counsel,⁵¹ is sufficient diligence. And the inability of an accused to employ counsel because of the prison rules or his financial embarrassment is also a material consideration in determining what is an excusable delay.⁵² So too it may be said that where a subpoena has been delivered to the proper official a reasonable time before the time for trial, but has not been returned, a party thus shows prima facie that he has exercised due diligence and is unready for trial; and the court should give him credit for an honest intention and continue the case.⁵³ indicted six months previous (Flores v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1897) 38 S. W. 790); five days before trial, defendant having been indicted for four months (Childers v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. 392, 35 S. W. 654); fifteen days before trial, defendant having been indicted for six months (Rial v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1895) 33 S. W. 226); nine days before trial, he having been arrested for two months (Dean v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1895) 29 S. W. 477); or three days before trial, defendant having been indicted for several months (Franklin v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. 203, 29 S. W. 1088) cannot be said to have exercised due diligence. And in fact any unnecessary delay on the part of defendant in suing out a process will not be tolerated by the court. Thus a defendant whose trial is set for nineteen days after the indictment, and who delays fourteen days in applying for process (Benson v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. 487, 43 S. W. 527); who delays fourteen days after arrest, his trial occurring seventeen days thereafter (Davis v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. 681, 44 S. W. 1099); who, in an interval of eighteen days for preparation, delays suing out process for eleven days (Collins v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1896) 34 S. W. 949); or who, having an interval of five weeks for preparation, delays action until eleven days before trial (Hennessy v. State, 23 Tex. App. 340, 5 S. W. 215) will be denied a continuance because of his neglect.

The practice of the parties to subpoena their witnesses according to the assignment of causes, while not of itself perhaps an excuse for delay, should be considered in connection with other circumstances in determining whether or not the party is guilty of laches. State v. Dakin, 52 Iowa 395, 3 N. W. 411.

Where a subpoena issued six days before the trial was by mistake served on the wrong person, a defendant cannot be said to be guilty of negligence where, on learning of the mistake, another subpoena was served four days before the trial, at the witness' usual place of residence, but not on him personally, and another subpoena was issued on the day of the trial, which had not yet been returned. State v. Burwell, 34 Kan. 312, 8 Pac. 470.

Where search for a material witness is begun three weeks before the commencement of the trial term and continued up to the time of trial, and the whereabouts of the desired witness is learned only two days before the ess has not been obeyed or is returned unexecuted, the applicant makes no unnecessary delay in suing out further process.⁵⁴

(II) DEFECTIVE ISSUANCE, DELIVERY, OR SERVICE—(A) Issuance. Under a statute requiring that the subpoenas shall be signed by a certain official, such subpoena, if made out and signed by another party, not in the immediate presence of such official, although perhaps with his assent, is nevertheless invalid, and cannot therefore form a legal basis for a motion to continue on the ground of the absence of the witness for whom such subpoena was issued.⁵⁵

(B) Delivery to Wrong Official. It is a lack of proper diligence to place process for witnesses who live in an adjoining county in the hands of the sheriff of the county of the forum, although it may appear that the witnesses reside at a point more accessible to that officer than to the official of the county of their residence.⁵⁶

(C) Insufficient Service of Subpoena. A defendant cannot be held responsible or made to suffer for a dereliction of duty on the part of the officer serving a process, and a return thereon of merely "not found," "not served," or "not executed," will, where the evidence sought to be procured is shown to be material, authorize a continuance to the same extent as if the process had not been returned.⁵⁷

c. Furnishing Identifying Information. It is also a lack of diligence on the part of a party summoning witnesses to fail to give proper information to the officer to enable him to more readily find such witnesses,⁵⁸ whether such information be of the name of the desired witness,⁵⁹ or as to his whereabouts,⁶⁰ when such information is known to the applicant.

d. Supervision of Execution or Return of Process. Due diligence requires that a party applying for a process shall follow up the same and see that it has been issued,⁶¹ and make effort to ascertain what progress is being made in the due service of the same; and where the process has not been returned, to present a motion in court requiring the official to make such return, so that he can see what has been done.⁶²

e. Preparation for Trial Before Indictment. In the greater number of jurisdictions the courts hold that a party has the right to compulsory process for witnesses after his arrest or recognizance before an indictment or information is found, while in a few the opposite view is taken; but in either of such jurisdictions it is agreed that the failure to prepare for trial and subpoena witnesses before an indictment or information is found is not such lack of diligence as will preclude a party from demanding a continuance.⁶³

3. EXCUSE FOR FAILURE TO EXERCISE DILIGENCE — a. In General. The mere fact that an absent witness had promised the applicant for a continuance that he would be present,⁶⁴ that the applicant had been informed that the witness would be present,⁶⁵ that the witness had been admonished by the court to be present,⁶⁶ that he was jointly indicted with the defendant and was under bonds to appear for trial,⁶⁷ or that the failure to subpoena the witness arose from a misunderstanding between defendant and his attorneys⁶⁸ does not excuse a party from exercising diligence in instituting legal process to secure the attendance of the witness.

b. Improbability of Securing Witness First Day of Trial. The mere fact that the time elapsing between the time an applicant for a continuance was indicted and the day set for trial is a few days less than the time required to have process on a witness executed and returned does not justify a party in failing to sue out such process where, by law, the court may sit for a sufficient time after the day of trial, and the applicant has no reason to believe that the court will adjourn on that or an earlier day.⁶⁹

c. Reliance Upon Subpœna Only. A party is not justified in relying merely upon a subpœna for the attendance of a witness;⁷⁰ if the same is returned unexecuted⁷¹ or is not obeyed, compulsory process, which is usually provided for in criminal cases, must be employed.⁷² Hence where the statute provides for the attachment of witnesses where they have failed to appear by process of subpœna, this course must be pursued to constitute a proper exercise of diligence.⁷³

d. Reliance Upon Process For Former Trial. In some jurisdictions it seems that witnesses once summoned are bound to attend all terms of court until the cause is tried, or until they are regularly discharged from further attendance; and in such jurisdictions it is not a lack of diligence to fail to subpoena them for a subsequent term.⁷⁴ In other jurisdictions, however, the mere fact that a witness had obeyed the subpœna and was present at a former term does not justify a party in failing to subpoena him for a subsequent term to which the trial has been continued.⁷⁵

e. Reliance Upon Opposite Party's Process. Proper diligence requires a party desiring a witness to use all available legal means in his own behalf, and not depend upon the diligence exercised by the opposite party.⁷⁶

Extent and limits of rule.—Hence an accused desiring a witness cannot rely upon the fact that the state has issued process for him (State v. Hayden, 45 Iowa 11; Clark v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. 127, 49 S. W. 85; Byrd v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 609, 47 S. W. 721; Tanner v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1898) 44 S. W. 489; Drake v. State, 5 Tex. App. 649), unless he shows that the state has exhausted all compulsory process and used all possible diligence (Mixon v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 66, 35 S. W. 394). So too while it may be the practice of

f. Reliance Upon Bond or Recognizance. Where a witness has been placed under bond or recognizance to appear in court, and is not present at the proper time, due diligence requires not only that the bond or recognizance shall be forfeited, but that additional process for his appearance shall be demanded by the party whose witness he is.⁷⁷

IV. APPLICATION.

A. Necessity. Generally speaking a party desiring a continuance must make the proper application therefor, and it is not error to rule the cause to trial where no such application or motion has been made.⁷⁸

B. Form of Application — 1. IN GENERAL. It is usually necessary that the application be made in writing,⁷⁹ although where a party is known to have sufficient grounds, the prosecution may, as a matter of favor to him, waive the formality of a written statement.⁸⁰ So too it may be said that the material facts which a statute requires to be set forth in an affidavit cannot be supplied by merely attaching to the one presented an old affidavit, however formal, which has served its purpose at a previous term.⁸¹

2. VERIFICATION. Unless the motion or application for a continuance is verified by affidavit it will not as a rule be recognized by the court, and no error arises in refusing the continuance in such a case.⁸²

C. Time of Application. An application for a continuance on the ground of an absent witness, made before it is known whether or not such witness would be in attendance, is clearly premature.⁸³ So too it has been held that it would be premature to apply for a continuance before a defendant had pleaded.⁸⁴ Where the existence of the ground is known a sufficient length of time beforehand, an application should be made before the jury has been impaneled and sworn,⁸⁵

a court, where the same witness is desired in several cases, to authorize process for him in only one case, yet due diligence requires an application for process in each case. Isham v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1899) 49 S. W. 594. In a few jurisdictions, however, it is held that where the state has taken the necessary steps to have a witness appear in its behalf, the accused has a right to rely on the good faith of the commonwealth, and to expect the attendance of such witness. Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1001; Rex v. Macarthy, C. & M. 625, 41 E. C. L. 339.

although it is otherwise where such information was not discovered beforehand and the equities of the case are clearly with defendant.⁸⁶ In some jurisdictions the matter is specially regulated by statute;⁸⁷ and in compliance therewith an applicant must, after having gone to trial, show that some unexpected occurrence which no reasonable diligence could have anticipated has arisen whereby he was so taken by surprise that a fair trial could not be had.⁸⁸

D. By Whom Made. A motion for a continuance may be supported by the prisoner's own affidavit.⁸⁹ Under certain conditions the court may require, in conjunction therewith, the affidavit of an absent witness.⁹⁰

E. Requisites and Sufficiency — 1. IN GENERAL. As some of the requisites to the sufficiency of grounds for a continuance cannot well appear by the allegations of the affidavit itself,⁹¹ and as the sufficiency of the grounds may be determined in some instances by matters dehors the affidavit,⁹² it would not be a sufficient nor accurately correct statement to merely lay down the broad proposition that the affidavit must clearly and fully set forth the grounds on which the continuance is asked. Its sufficiency must be determined by the controlling facts and circumstances of each particular case. It may, however, be said that it must be full, satisfactory, and direct as to all material allegations.⁹³ If reliance is placed on a statute it must be made in compliance therewith.⁹⁴ Nothing can be presumed in its aid.⁹⁵ It must clearly show that affiant would be injured by a denial of his motion,⁹⁶ and if made by a defendant must negative his guilt⁹⁷ and

87. State v. Bengé, 61 Iowa 658, 17 N. W. 100, holding that under the statutes of that state a motion for a continuance must be filed the second day of the term, or as soon thereafter as it becomes certain that such motion will be necessary before the trial.

88. Stanley v. State, 16 Tex. App. 392.

Where such surprise is not shown and the continuance is therefore properly refused, the court should nevertheless consider the substance of the application in passing on a motion for a new trial. Stanley v. State, 16 Tex. App. 392.

89. Com. v. Knapp, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491. See also Fogarty v. State, 80 Ga. 450, 453, 5 S. E. 782, where the court said: "While other persons might testify that the witness has been subpoenaed, and as to the materiality of his testimony, the defendant alone can testify as to whether the witness is absent by his procurement or consent, or that the motion is not made for the purpose of delay only. If, therefore, any other person undertakes to swear to these grounds, or to the grounds of the motion generally, we think that counsel for the State has a right to cross-examine him as to the truth of the grounds set out in his affidavit. There is no reason shown in the record why this defendant could not have made this affidavit."

Error in name of affiant.—An affidavit for a continuance should not be disregarded merely on the ground that it was signed by a name different than that by which the party was indicted, it appearing from extrinsic facts and circumstances that the two parties are one and the same. Golden v. State, 19 Ark. 590, where defendant was indicted under the name of "Harrison Golden," and the motion for the continuance was signed by "Alexander Golden."

90. Mendum v. Com., 6 Rand. (Va.) 704. But see Kennedy v. State, 81 Ind. 379.

91. Thus the probability of the truth of the affidavit, and that the absent evidence would likely affect the result, both of which are essential requisites to a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses. See supra, III, B, 2, (III), (A), (2), (3).

Predication of indictment for perjury.—The facts should be stated with such certainty that an indictment for perjury can be predicated thereon. McCulloch v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1895) 33 S. W. 230.

Vague and uncertain allegations.—An allegation on the ground of the absence of a witness who, it is alleged, would swear that he was "in the vicinity" of the spot at which the alleged crime was committed (Russell v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. 424, 26 S. W. 990), or that a certain fact had been made known to defendant "a short time" before the killing took place (Winkfield v. State, 41 Tex. 148) is too vague and uncertain. See also Williams v. State, 10 Tex. App. 114.

state the grounds of his defense.⁹⁸ A continuance should not, however, be refused on purely technical grounds,⁹⁹ nor is it required that affiant shall state his belief in regard to matters which he bases solely on facts previously stated.¹

2. STATING CONCLUSIONS. It is essential that the affidavit or application state with detail the facts and conditions relied on as constituting the ground for a continuance, and not mere conclusions which the pleader, through his own personal knowledge of the facts, has formed.² Thus it is not generally enough to merely allege that the testimony is material,³ or merely that public excitement exists, without showing facts on which such belief is predicated.⁴

3. ALLEGATIONS ON INFORMATION AND BELIEF. So too it is not sufficient for the affidavit to state merely that affiant is "informed and believes" of the existence of a certain ground. He must state the facts on which his belief is founded, that the court may judge as to whether or not his conclusions are reasonable and well founded;⁵ and if affiant alleges that he has been informed of certain facts or conditions, the names and whereabouts of the informants should be given.⁶

4. PARTICULAR OR SPECIAL AVERMENTS — a. Name and Residence of Witness. If the ground alleged is the absence of a witness, the affidavit must, unless there are peculiar circumstances excusing such definiteness, state the name and residence of such witness,⁷ or otherwise designate his location so that the court may know at the time the application is made whether he is or is not within its jurisdiction.⁸

b. Cause of Absence of Witness. The affidavit for a continuance on the ground of an absent witness should show proper excuse for his absence,⁹ although it has been held that where all the facts specially required by the statute have been averred he is entitled to a continuance regardless of the cause of the absence;¹⁰ and it is usually held to be necessary that the application contain an averment that the witness is not absent by the consent, connivance, or procurement of the applicant.¹¹

c. Specific Facts Expected to Be Shown—(1) IN GENERAL. In an application for a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses, it is not sufficient to state in general terms or by indefinite allegations what the absent testimony will be; it must specifically set forth the facts expected to be proved by such witnesses, so that the court may judge of the materiality of the same.¹² While it has been argued that to disclose at the time the continuance is desired, facts to which it is expected an absent witness will swear, may in many instances work a hardship or injustice upon a party in the presentation of his case,¹³ it is nevertheless generally held by the courts to be necessary to the proper administration of justice that the expected testimony be set out with such definiteness and detail as will enable the court to judge from the issues presented by the pleadings whether or not such absent testimony is material and indispensable to a fair and just trial.¹⁴ This is especially true where the defense sought to be established is that of an alibi.¹⁵ So too it has been held that the means which a witness had of knowing the facts should if possible be shown;¹⁶ and if the absent testimony is expected to be used to contradict the testimony of an anticipated witness, the affidavit should allege that the anticipated testimony is false.¹⁷ So too it should allege that the testimony of an absent

13. This principle has been given judicial recognition by the courts of Tennessee, and in Nelson v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 482, it is held that the reason is that at the first term the accused may not have had sufficient time to ascertain what, and by whom, he would be able to prove the particular facts; and for that reason he should not be required to show to the court what facts he expected to prove upon his first application. This ruling was also made in State v. Morris, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 220, and is approved in Jones v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 585; but that the facts must be set out in an application for a subsequent continuance see infra, IV, E, 6.

An affidavit that the prosecuting witness has threatened to kill accused, and that such threat had been communicated to the defendant, is insufficient if it fails to show how the witness, who it is alleged would so testify, knew of such threat. *Long v. Evidence of symptoms of malaria, such as pains in the back, head, and neck, accompanied by dizziness, are not to be rejected as immaterial, when the affidavit alleges that such evidence is needed for the purpose of asking hypothetical questions of medical witnesses, merely because the affidavit does not allege that the deceased died of malaria. Pettit v. State, 135 Ind. 393, 34 N. E. 1118.

witness is not cumulative;¹⁸ but a continuance should not be refused merely because an affiant is unable to state whether or not a witness would testify to anything in addition to his testimony at a former trial.¹⁹

(II) EFFECT OF INADMISSIBILITY OF PART OF AVERMENTS. If a part of the alleged testimony for which a continuance is sought is inadmissible, it has been held not to be the duty of the trial court to distinguish the admissible from the inadmissible, and receive the one and exclude the other; but it may exclude the affidavit as an entirety.²⁰

d. Truth of Expected Testimony. The affidavit must also aver that the affiant believes that the testimony which he expects the absent witness to give is true.²¹

e. Facts Constituting Diligence. A mere statement that accused has used due diligence is insufficient;²² the effort constituting such diligence must be fully and distinctly set forth,²³ whether it be by exhausting the process of the court or otherwise,²⁴ or facts excusing such diligence must be shown.²⁵ If sufficient time has elapsed, after the existence of a witness became known to defendant, to have process issued, it must be alleged that timely²⁶ issuance of such process was had,²⁷

and that the process was placed in the hands of the proper officer for service.²⁸ And if a subpoena or other process has been issued but not executed, the time at which the process was returned must be alleged,²⁹ or other necessary averments must be made showing clearly that diligence had been exercised in suing out or procuring the service of subsequent process.³⁰

f. That Facts Cannot Be Shown by Other Witnesses. Ordinarily the rule is that it must appear in the affidavit either by express averment or necessary intendment that the facts sought to be proved by the absent witnesses could not be proven by other witnesses;³¹ but where it is shown that there will be a conflict in the evidence in regard to such facts, inasmuch as the testimony of the absent witness alone might raise a reasonable doubt, an averment in such case is not a necessary requisite.³²

g. That Witness May Probably Be Secured. An application for a continuance on the ground of an absent witness must also show the probability of, and give assurance of, the attendance of such witness at the time to which it is proposed to continue the case, and state the facts on which the belief of a subsequent attendance is founded, so that the court may see that such belief is a well-founded reasonable expectation and not a mere hope.³³

h. Should Disclaim Purpose of Delay. It is also usually held to be a necessary requisite of the affidavit that it contain an averment that the continuance is not sought for the purpose of vexation or delay.³⁴

5. ALTERNATIVE AVERMENTS. An application for a continuance, alleging the grounds therefor in the alternative, is not sufficiently certain and definite.³⁵

6. SECOND OR FURTHER CONTINUANCE. The affidavit should show whether or not the continuance is sought for the first time,³⁶ as under the procedure of some jurisdictions greater particularity and conciseness is required in an application for a subsequent continuance than in that for the first.³⁷

F. Corroborative or Supplemental Affidavits. An applicant should state the facts on which he relies, distinctly and fully at first, and supplemental affidavits should not be received.³⁸

Where a former application for a continuance is refused, and instead thereof the cause is postponed to another day in the same term, a subsequent application on the day to which the cause was postponed is not a second application within the meaning of the statute, and need not comply with the requirements therein provided for second applications. In Tennessee a continuance at the first term may be had by either party on a general affidavit, but at a second or subsequent term it must state the facts he expects to be able to prove by the several persons named as desired witnesses. Nelson v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 482. Nor is this rendered less necessary by the fact that the second application was made at a special and not a general term. Leach v. State, 99 Tenn. 584, 42 S. W. 195. See also State v. Morris, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 220, where it was held that a defendant in a capital case need not, upon his first application for a continuance, disclose the facts to which an absent witness would swear.

In Texas the second application must, by virtue of the Code of Criminal Procedure, specifically state that the testimony cannot be procured from any other source known to the accused, and that the accused has reasonable expectation of procuring it at the next term. But where the ground on which the continuance is requested is one necessarily known by other parties, such as public excitement or prejudice, corroborative affidavits or evidence of other parties should be offered. Ballard v. State, 31 Fla. 266, 12 So. 865;

G. Amendments. The grant of leave to amend the affidavit is discretionary with the trial court.³⁹

H. Right to Contradict or Discredit Affidavit—1. BY PRIVATE OPINION OF COURT. An application for a continuance should not be denied because of the private opinion of the court regarding the integrity and credibility of the affiant,⁴⁰ although in case of suspicion the court may consider what has passed in court⁴¹ or come to its knowledge by virtue of its connection in the case.⁴² The demeanor, conduct, and conversation of the accused in the presence of the court may be considered.⁴³

2. BY INCONSISTENT ALLEGATIONS IN PREVIOUS APPLICATION. Where defendant's application for a continuance contains a palpable and unexplained contradiction of material allegations in his former application, a continuance may properly be denied.⁴⁴

3. BY COUNTER-AFFIDAVITS—a. In General. In some jurisdictions counter-affidavits will not be received.⁴⁵ In other jurisdictions the opposite rule prevails.⁴⁶ Where the prosecution introduces counter-affidavits the cross-examination of such affiants by the defense should be limited to matters embraced in their affidavits.⁴⁷

He, beyond all controversy, cannot. He has no discretion to act upon such knowledge. The discretion allowed in applications for a continuance must be within the law, and must spring out of, and be bounded by what transpires in the case. It cannot be justified upon what the Court, as a man, may or may not know. Justice is administered according to general rules; rules which, if applicable in a single case, must be applicable in all like cases, no matter who are the parties, or what their character"); *Baker v. Where defendant has not put his character in issue it is error to allow a judgment

And as applications for continuances are addressed to the court, it would seem that the proper practice should be not to allow any evidence concerning the same to be placed before the jury.⁴⁸

b. As Determined by Nature of Averments Sought to Be Discredited. In some jurisdictions the right to introduce counter-affidavits is determined by the portion of the application sought to be contradicted. If it is intended to controvert the facts which are proposed to be shown by the absent witness it is clear that such practice would put in issue before the court material facts which should be only passed upon by the jury, and would often deprive one of the advantage sometimes accruing by having his witnesses before the jury, and is therefore not permissible.⁴⁹ Counter-affidavits showing what such witnesses have sworn to on a former trial,⁵⁰ or that the witness if present would not swear to the matter stated by defendant,⁵¹ are, however, allowable. Moreover in some jurisdictions it is the practice, said to have been brought down from the common law,⁵² to allow counter-affidavits to be offered for the purpose of negating allegations in the application other than those pertaining to what the witness will testify, such as that of diligence or of the probability of securing the proposed testimony.⁵³

V. HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

A. Presumptions. An application for continuance must in some respects be drawn more carefully than a pleading, and will be accorded no favorable intendment,⁵⁴ for it will be presumed that the defendant will make the strongest possible statements in his own favor that the facts will warrant.⁵⁵ Presumptions will not, however, be indulged against a prisoner's application for a continuance, because of the absence of a material witness, unless based on competent evidence or facts legally before the court,⁵⁶ and where a reasonable doubt exists as to whether or not an accused has been afforded sufficient assistance to enable him to procure his witnesses, he should be given the benefit of such doubt.⁵⁷

B. Burden of Proof. The burden is on the party asking a continuance to show the necessity therefor,⁵⁸ and that he has exercised due diligence.⁵⁹

C. Imposition of Condition by Court. Strictly speaking, an accused should rely upon all his grounds for a continuance upon his first application, and where of a conviction against him to be introduced and read in evidence, to overcome his application for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness by whom he expected to prove his good character. Felsenthal v. State, 30 Tex. App. 675, 18 S. W. 644.

he has not done so it has been held that the court has a right to impose certain terms as the condition of a further application.⁶⁰ So too it has been held that where the granting or refusal of a continuance is within the discretion of the court, it is competent to require the applicant to pay the costs of the state as a condition of the continuance.⁶¹

D. Time For Which Continuance May Be Granted. A continuance, when deemed just and proper, need not necessarily be to a regular term, but if justice is as well attained, it may be to an adjourned term only.⁶² Where opposition is made by the adverse party it will not be made over a regular term to a succeeding one.⁶³ While in some jurisdictions the length of time to which a trial may be postponed without the consent of the accused is limited by statute, yet if a continuance is ordered for a greater length of time than thus allowed, a defendant cannot claim a release on habeas corpus until the expiration of the statutory time.⁶⁴

E. Necessity of Personal Presence of Accused. A party is not deprived of a constitutional right to appear to defend in person and by counsel because of the fact that he was not personally present when a continuance was granted, as such guaranty has reference to matters connected with the trial and not with preliminary matters such as the granting of a continuance.⁶⁵ And the granting of such continuance when the accused is not personally present, at least before his arraignment,⁶⁶ or where it appears that no injury is done the defendant,⁶⁷ is not reversible error. And unless the record negatives his personal presence, it will be presumed that he is before the court.⁶⁸

F. Necessity of Formal Order. In some jurisdictions it is expressly declared by statute that a failure to enter a continuance on record does not operate as a discontinuance,⁶⁹ and in the absence of any express provision a failure to make such entry is not fatal, especially where the continuance operates in favor of the accused;⁷⁰ although in practice before a justice of the peace a failure to make a formal entry has been held fatal.⁷¹

G. Effect of Improper Refusal to Grant⁷² — 1. IN GENERAL. Although the refusal to grant a continuance may, when judged by the facts and conditions existing at the time the motion was made, have been erroneous, yet a new trial should not be granted therefor if, before the close of the trial, the wrong is corrected and no injury or prejudice to the applicant results.⁷³ On the other hand, although the court, when judged by the facts and evidence before it at the time

60. Smith v. Com., 17 S. W. 868, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 612, holding that this is especially to be considered no error where, from all the facts in the case, the accused was accorded even more privileges and consideration than he was legally entitled to.

61. And such requirements cannot be considered as requiring the applicant to pay the costs of the state for the term as part punishment in advance of his conviction, as it will be considered purely as a condition of the continuance. In re Esten, 9 R. I. 191.

Linhart*, 23 Iowa 314 (where the point as to whether or not an accused must be personally present is not passed upon, as the continuance in such case was held to have really arisen by operation of law, and not by order of the court, and it was clear that no possible harm was done defendant); Snodgrass v. Com., 89 Va. 679, 17 S. E. 238.

of passing on the motion, may be held to have exercised a sound discretion in its refusal, yet if, when all the evidence is in and everything transpiring at the trial of the cause is considered, it is clear that defendant's rights have been prejudiced, the court must remedy its mistake by granting him a new trial.⁷⁴ But where a defendant asks for trial, in the absence of a witness whose presence he had requested, the absence of such witness cannot be urged as ground for a new trial;⁷⁵ nor where defendant's motion for a continuance fails to show diligence can he supply the defect by filing another affidavit in support of a new trial.⁷⁶

2. NECESSITY OF OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS.⁷⁷ If a party desires to take advantage of the irregular or prejudicial granting of a continuance he must make due objection at the time the same is granted,⁷⁸ as consent thereto will be implied;⁷⁹ and as error will not be presumed, such objections must appear in the bill of exceptions.⁸⁰

VI. SETTING ASIDE CONTINUANCE.

A. Right to Set Aside. A court, by the mere granting of a continuance in a criminal case, does not thereby necessarily lose all jurisdiction of the cause for that term,⁸¹ as the inherent power which all courts have to control their orders, judgments, and decrees during term time carries with it the authority under certain circumstances to set aside such continuance.⁸²

B. Exercise of Right to Set Aside—1. IN GENERAL. This power should be exercised only for the most cogent reasons and in such rare cases as show most plainly no abuse of discretion and no material injury to the accused.⁸³

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES. The granting of a change of venue is equivalent to setting aside a continuance which has been previously granted in the same cause on the same day.⁸⁴

Extent and limits of rule.—It should not be done when the setting aside would operate as a surprise upon the party obtaining the continuance (State v. Whitsell, 55 Mo. 430); and it has been held that where a continuance has been granted to the next regular term it is an unwise practice to try a defendant against his objection at a special term occurring before such term (McKay v. State, 12 Mo. 492; Hair v. State, 14 Nebr. 503, 16 N. W. 829). But where, immediately after a continuance is granted, and before the transaction of other business, the state agrees to admit the alleged testimony of an absent witness, a continuance just previously granted on that ground may be set aside and the trial ordered. State v. Plowman, 28 Kan. 569. See also Callahan v. State, 30 Tex. 488, where a continuance having been granted upon the express understanding that it should be set aside on the appearance of certain witnesses, defendant could not upon their appearance object to proceeding to trial.

1. Literally, by continuing; in continuing. Adams Gloss.

passes in the same action; and, to avoid multiplicity of actions, a man might in one action of trespass recover damages for many trespasses, laying the first to be done with a continuando to the whole time in which the rest of the trespasses were done; which was in this form: Continuando (by continuing) the trespasses aforesaid, etc., from the day aforesaid, etc., until such a day, including the last trespass.² In criminal procedure, an allegation in any appropriate form of words that an offense whereof a day of beginning is stated is continuing to another day stated.³

CONTINUE. To remain in a given place or condition; to remain in connection with; to abide; to stay;⁴ to extend.⁵ Used in connection with an office, the term means to remain in it.⁶

CONTINUED. Extended without interruption;⁷ sometimes used as equivalent to immediate.⁸

CONTINUING. Perpetrating, protracting, or prolonging from one time to another.⁹ (Continuing: Consideration, see CONSIDERATION; CONTRACTS. Damages, see DAMAGES. Guaranty, see GUARANTY.)

2. Black L. Dict. [citing Termes de la Ley]. And see Benson v. Swift, 2 Mass. 50, 54, where it is said: "An action is said to be laid with a continuando when the injury is alleged to have been committed by continuation from one day to another, or at divers days and times between such a day and such a day." See also Richardson v. Northrup, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 85, 87, where it is said: "In case of cattle trespassing on the lands of an adjoining owner, it often happens that the injury is a continuing one, committed by the different animals on the same or on different days, so that it would be almost impossible to separate the acts of trespass. It was indispensable in such cases, to avoid a multiplicity of actions, and to relieve parties from the obligation of proving distinct and independent causes of action, that they might allege the trespass with a continuando, and recover for such injury as they were able to prove to have been done by the defendant's cattle."

Dec. 548, where it is said: "To continue a line or ditch, does not, in the ordinary or grammatical sense, admit of any intervening substance to break the continuity. It implies uninterrupted connection; and the ditch cannot properly be said to be continued, by terminating it at the north end of the pond, and by deepening the outlet of that pond at the southeast corner."

8. Kleinschmidt v. McAndrews, 4 Mont. 8, 11, 223, 5 Pac. 281, 2 Pac. 286, construing Mont. Laws (1872), p. 394, § 15.

Distinguished from "actual."—The word "actual" was designed to exclude the idea of a mere formal change of possession, and the word "continued" to exclude the idea of a mere temporary change. But it never was the design of the statute to give such extension of meaning to this phrase, "continued change of possession," as to require, upon penalty of a forfeiture of the goods, that the vendor should never have any control over or use of them. This construction, if made without exception, would lead to very unjust and absurd results. Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, 507, 76 Am. Dec. 500 [quoted in Porter v. Bucher, 98 Cal. 454, 459, 33 Pac. 335].

"Actual and continued change of possession" under Mont. Rev. Stat. p. 436, § 169, was construed in Dodge v. Jones, 7 Mont. 121, 14 Pac. 707.

"Continued in charge of a ship" after a licensed pilot has offered to take charge as used in an indictment, considered in Chaney v. Payne, 1 Q. B. 712, 1 G. & D. 348, 6 Jur. 80, 41 E. C. L. 742.

"Continued notice in a daily newspaper," requiring creditors to exhibit their accounts to the executors or administrators, within twelve months after public notice in one or more of the public newspapers of this state, was considered in Smith's Estate, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 352, 354.

CONTINUING INTEREST. The interest in an estate on which a duty required by law is a charge.¹⁰ (See, generally, TAXATION.)

CONTINUING OFFENSE. A transaction or a series of acts set on foot by a single impulse, and operated by an unintermittent force, no matter how long a time it may occupy.¹¹

CONTINUING ONE'S RESIDENCE. To designate the place of a person's domicil.¹²

CONTINUING SECURITY. A promissory note, payable on demand, is intended to be a continuing security.¹³ (See, generally, COMMERCIAL PAPER.)

CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

CONTINUOUS. Recurring at repeated intervals, so as to be of repeated occurrence;¹⁴ without interval or interruption.¹⁵ (Continuous: Easement, see EASEMENTS.)

CONTINUOUS ADVERSE USE. Uninterrupted adverse use.¹⁶ (See, generally, ADVERSE POSSESSION.)

CONTINUOUS AND UNINTERRUPTED USE. Use not interrupted by the act of the owner of the land, or by a voluntary abandonment by the party claiming an easement.¹⁷ (See, generally, ADVERSE POSSESSION.)

CONTINUOUS CRIME. A crime which endures after the period of consummation.¹⁸

CONTINUOUS CURRENT. An alternated current which has been so reversed that the whole flows in one direction.¹⁹

CONTINUOUS LINE. A division line between adjoining tracts existing at its two extremities and for the principal part of the distance between the two tracts

Distinguished from "non-continuous."—

"The continuous are defined to be self perpetuating, independent of human intervention; as the flowing of streams of water, which would pass by a deed as appurtenant. The non-continuous, those which are dependant upon human intervention for their enjoyment; as ways which do not pass unless essential to the enjoyment of the estate conveyed." Providence Tool Co. v. Corliss Steam Engine Co., 9 R. I. 564, 573 [citing Lampman v. Mills, 21 N. Y. 505, 515].

As used in a statute relating to payment of dividends by a corporation, "continuous" is considered in Hodge v. U. S. Steel Corp., (N. J. 1903) 54 Atl. 1, 6.

"Continuous emigrant passage from Omaha to San Francisco" is not a contract to carry one person from Omaha to an intermediate station, and a second to another station, and so on, but only a contract to carry the same person through the entire route. Cody v. Central Pac. R. Co., 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,540, 4 Sawy. 114.

"Continuous use" does not necessarily mean "constant use." Bodfish v. Bodfish, 105 Mass. 317, 319.

Many pieces of twine may be tied together to form a continuous kite string, many different breadths may be united to form a continuous carpet and surely two pieces of zinc may be soldered together to form a continuous strip. Brown v. Reed Mfg. Co., 81 Fed. 48, 49.

and as such recognized by the parties, although, on a portion of the distance, there is no improvement or division fence.²⁰

CONTINUOUSLY. With continuity or continuation; without interruption; unbrokenly;²¹ without break or interruption.²² (See CONTINUOUS.)

CONTINUOUS PASSAGE. As referred to in a conductor's train check, the continuous passage of the person to whom it was first issued, and of no other person.²³ (See, generally, CARRIERS.)

CONTINUOUS TRIP. As applied to a railway ticket means that a purchaser who accepts and uses it, is bound to take a train which will carry him continuously through from one city to the other, both in going and returning, and not to stop off at an intermediate station while going either way.²⁴ (See, generally, CARRIERS.)

CONTRA. Against; in opposition to; contrary to; on the opposite side; the contrary. A term constantly used in the reports, to denote the opposition of counsel in a cause; the disallowance by the court of a point in argument (curia contra); and the opposition of cases cited as establishing opposite doctrines. In some of the older books, contra is used instead of versus, in the titles of causes.²⁵

22. State v. Vanderbilt, 37 Ohio St. 590, 598, where it is said: "The sections allowing consolidation limit it to instances where the roads are so constructed or designed 'as to admit the passage of burden or passenger cars over any two or more of such roads continuously;' that is to say, over all the lines to be consolidated, 'without break or interruption,' or to lines 'when the several roads so united will form a continuous line for the passage of cars.' The two forms of expression mean the same thing and explain each other."

I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Contract Defined. A contract may be defined as an agreement between competent parties, supported by a legal consideration, and in the form, if any, prescribed by law, creating an obligation on the part of one or both to do or refrain from doing some lawful thing.¹ To constitute a contract, the agreement must create an obligation; it must be an agreement enforceable at law — an ele-

1. An exact definition of the word "contract" is not easy to give. Various definitions have been suggested by commentators and courts, the most common of which is that of Blackstone, Kent, Marshall, and Taney, "An agreement upon sufficient consideration, to do or not to do a particular thing." 2 Bl. Comm. 442; 2 Kent Comm. 449; Marshall, C. J., in Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 197, 4 L. ed. 529; Taney, C. J., in Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 572, 9 L. ed. 773. And see Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 81, 70 Am. Dec. 638; Willis v. Turnley, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 789. It is in substance so defined by statute in some states. See Cal. Civ. Code, § 6549; Dak. Civ. Code, § 870; Ga. Civ. Code (1895), § 3631; La. Civ. Code (1900), § 1761. This definition, however, has been frequently criticized and is far from complete. See Metcalf Contr. 1; 1 Parson Contr. § 2; Hilliard Contr. § 2; Lawson Contr. § 6. As was said by a recent writer, if we seek to build up a definition of the word "contract" which shall include all things that have been called contracts and exclude all things which have been held not to be contracts the task is impossible. Harriman Contr. 4. Perhaps the best definition to be found in the reports is in a Kansas case: "The agreement of two competent parties about a legal and competent subject matter, upon a mutual legal consideration, with a mutuality of obligation." State v. Barker, 4 Kan. 379, 96 Am. Dec. 175. See also Loaiza v. Superior Ct., 85 Cal. 11, 30, 24 Pac. 707, 20 Am. St. Rep. 197, 9 L. R. A. 376; Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231, 236, 33 N. E. 1034, 52 N. Y. St. 342, 20 L. R. A. 785; Toledo Bank v. Bond, 1 Ohio St. 622, 657. And see Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493, 496, 1 Am. Rep. 576.

Other definitions of "contract."—A voluntary and lawful agreement by competent parties, for a good consideration to do or not do a specified thing. Burnett, J., in Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 81, 70 Am. Dec. 638.

A compact between two or more parties. Marshall, C. J., in Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 87, 136, 3 L. ed. 162.

A transaction between two or more persons, in which each party comes under an obligation to the other, and each reciprocally acquires a right to whatever is promised by the other. Washington, J., in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 656, 4 L. ed. 629.

An agreement between two or more persons for the doing or the not doing of some particular thing. 1 Parson Contr. § 2.

Where a promise is made on one side and assented to on the other, or where two or more persons enter into an engagement with each other by a promise on either side. 2 Stephen Comm. 108, 109.

A deliberate engagement between competent parties upon a legal consideration to do or to abstain from doing some act. Story Contr.

§ 1. And see Pelham v. State, 30 Tex. 422, 423.

A drawing of minds together until they meet. Birdseye, J., in McNulty v. Prentice, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 204.

A meeting of minds of the contracting parties. Park, J., in Atwater v. Lockwood, 39 Conn. 45, 49.

An agreement when both parties become obligated. Hopkins, S., in Safford v. Wyckoff, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 442, 450.

A contract is a promise from one or more persons to another or others, either made in fact or created by the law, to do or refrain from some lawful thing; being also under the seal of the promisor, or being reduced to a judicial record, or being accompanied by a valid consideration, or being executed, and not being in a form forbidden or declared inadequate by law. Bishop Contr. § 22.

An agreement enforceable at law, made between two or more persons, by which rights are acquired by one or more to acts or forbearances on the part of the other or others. Anson Contr. 11.

An agreement by which two parties mutually promise and engage, or one of them promises or engages to the other, to give some particular thing or to do or abstain from doing some particular act. Hall Torts and Contr. 153.

An agreement containing a promise made by the one party for a valid consideration and agreed to by the other party. Leake Contr. 9.

An agreement or promise enforceable by law. Pollock Contr. 1.

The union of several in an accordant expression of will with the object of creating an obligation between them. Savigny Obl. II, p. 8.

A speech between two parties whereby something is to be done. The Mirror.

A bargain or agreement voluntarily made upon good consideration between two or more persons capable of contracting to do or forbear to do some lawful act. 1 Comyn Contr. 2.

A mutual assent of two or more persons competent to contract founded on a sufficient and legal motive, inducement, or consideration, to perform some legal act, or to omit to do anything the performance of which is not enjoined by law. Chitty Contr. 3.

A transaction in which each party comes under an obligation to the other and each reciprocally acquires a right to what is promised by the other. 1 Powell Contr. VI.

An agreement by which two parties mutually promise and engage, or one of them only promises and engages to the other, to give some particular thing or to do, or abstain from doing, some particular act. Pothier Obl. § 1.

When both parties will the same thing and each communicates his will to the other with a mutual engagement to carry it into effect.

ment in contract which has often been lost sight of by judges and writers. While an agreement may be void, that is, destitute of legal effect, it is absurd to speak of a void contract, for a contract is an agreement plus a legal obligation, and if there is no obligation there is no contract at all.²

B. Express, Implied, and Quasi or Constructive Contracts — 1. EXPRESS CONTRACTS. An express contract is one where the intention of the parties and terms of the agreement are declared or expressed by the parties, in writing or orally, at the time it is entered into.³ It is an express contract, although some of its terms are dependent upon the happening of a future event.⁴

2. IMPLIED CONTRACTS. An implied contract, in the proper sense, is where the intention of the parties is not expressed, but an agreement in fact, creating an obligation, is implied or presumed from their acts, as in the case where a person performs services for another, who accepts the same, the services not being performed under such circumstances as to show that they were intended to be gratuitous, or where a person performs services for another on request.⁵ There can be no implied contract where there is an express contract between the parties in reference to the same subject-matter.⁶ This rule only applies, however, where

An agreement between two or more persons whereby in consideration of something done or promised to be done by the party on one side the party on the other side undertakes to do or not to do a particular thing. Wheeler v. Glasgow, 97 Ala. 700, 11 So. 758.

A transaction between two or more persons in which each party comes under an obligation to the other and each reciprocally acquires a right to whatever is promised or stipulated by the other. Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1.

the two contracts relate to the same subject-matter, and where the provisions of the express contract would supersede those of the other.⁷

3. QUASI OR CONSTRUCTIVE CONTRACTS. The term "implied contract" has also been applied to a class of obligations which are imposed or created by law without regard to the assent of the party bound, on the ground that they are dictated by reason and justice, and which are allowed to be enforced by an action ex contractu.⁸ These obligations, however, are not contract obligations at all in the true sense, for there is no agreement; but they are clothed with the semblance of contract for the purpose of the remedy. They are described by the term "quasi" or "constructive" contracts.⁹

Exceptions to rule.—A contract may be implied, however, where the express agreement is unenforceable for certain reasons, or where there is a breach by one of the parties. See infra, IX, F; XII, A, 2; and ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF, 4 Cyc. 328 et seq.; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; INFANTS.

7. Commercial Bank v. Pfeiffer, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 327.

8. 2 Bl. Comm. 443; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. St. 465. See also People v. Speir, 77 N. Y. 144; Wickham v. Weil, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 518.

9. Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. St. 465, 468, where, in making the distinction between quasi or constructive contracts and implied contracts in the proper sense, the court said: "In one case the contract is mere fiction, a form imposed in order to adapt the case to a given remedy; in the other it is a fact legitimately inferred. In one, the intention is disregarded; in the other, it is ascertained and enforced. In one, the duty defines the contract; in the other, the contract defines the duty. We have, therefore, in law three classes of relations called contracts. 1. Constructive contracts, which are fictions of law adapted to enforce legal duties by actions of contract, where no proper contract exists, express or implied. 2. Implied contracts, which arise under circumstances which, according to the ordinary course of dealing and the common understanding of men, show a mutual intention to contract. 3. Express contracts, already sufficiently distinguished."

Instances of quasi or constructive contracts.

—Among the instances of quasi or constructive contracts may be mentioned cases in which one person has received money which another person ought to have received, and which the latter is allowed to recover from the former in an action of assumpsit for money had and received, or money received to the use of the plaintiff (Barnett v. Warren, 82 Ala. 557, 2 So. 457; Boyett v. Potter, 80 Ala. 476, 2 So. 534; Merchants' Bank v. Rawls, 7 Ga. 191, 50 Am. Dec. 394; O'Fallon v. Boismenu, 3 Mo. 405, 26 Am. Dec. 678; Lawson v. Lawson, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 230, 80 Am. Dec. 702); cases in which one person has been compelled to pay money which another ought to have paid, and which he is allowed to recover from the latter in an action of assumpsit for money paid to his use (Tuttle v. Armstead, 53 Conn. 175, 22 Atl. 677; Wells v. Porter, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 119; Exall v. Partridge, 3 Esp. 8, 8 T. R. 308, 4 Rev. Rep. 656); cases of account stated, from which the law implies a promise which will support an action of assumpsit (Marshall v. Lewark, 117 Ind. 377, 20 N. E. 253; Warren v. Caryl, 61 Vt. 331, 17 Atl. 741; Hopkins v. Logan, 7 Dowl. P. C. 360, 8 L. J. Exch. 218, 5 M. & W. 241); judgments, on which an action of assumpsit or debt may be maintained, according to the circumstances, because of a promise to pay implied by law (Williams v. Jones, 2 D. & L. 680, 14 L. J. Exch. 145, 13 M. & W. 628); cases in which an obligation to pay money is imposed by a statute (Milford v. Com., 144 Mass. 64, 10 N. E. 516; Woods v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 345, 33 Am. Rep. 396; Woodstock v. Hancock, 62 Vt. 348, 19 Atl. 991; Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450, 17 L. ed. 805).

Services rendered or goods delivered under unenforceable agreement.—If services are rendered or goods delivered under an agreement to pay therefor which is unenforceable because of the statute of frauds (see FRAUDS, STATUTE OF) or for any reason other than illegality (see infra, VII), and perhaps infancy in some cases (see INFANTS), the law will imply a contract to pay what the services are worth or the value of the goods, as the case may be. Gay v. Mooney, 67 N. J. L. 27, 50 Atl. 596; Cushing v. Chapman, 115 Fed. 237.

As to quasi or constructive contracts see, generally, ACCOUNTS AND ACCOUNTING, 1 Cyc. 375; ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF, 4 Cyc. 317; JUDGMENTS; MASTER AND SERVANT; MONEY

C. Executory and Executed Contracts. An executed contract is a contract which has been fully performed since it was made, or which was performed at the time it was made, so that nothing remains to be done on either side, and an executory contract is one which is either wholly unperformed, or in which there remains something to be done on both sides, or on one side. A contract may be executed on one side and executory on the other.¹⁰ An executed contract of sale is a bargain and sale which has passed the property in the thing sold, while executory contracts of sale are contracts as opposed to conveyances and create rights in personam to a fulfilment of their terms instead of rights in rem to an enjoyment of the property passed.¹¹

D. Promise Defined. A promise is the declaration by any person of his intention to do or forbear from anything at the request or for the use of another. A proposal when accepted becomes a promise.¹²

E. Agreement Defined. Agreement is the expression by two or more persons of a common intention to affect their legal relations;¹³ it consists in their being of the same mind and intention concerning the matter agreed upon.¹⁴

F. Bilateral and Unilateral Contracts. A bilateral contract is a contract in which there are reciprocal promises, so that there is something to be done or forborne on both sides,¹⁵ while a unilateral contract is one in which there is a promise on one side only, the consideration on the other side being executed.¹⁶

G. Commutative Contracts. "Commutative contract" is a term used in the civil law to designate a contract in which each of the contracting parties gives and receives an equivalent.¹⁷

H. Compact Defined. "Compact" and "contract" are used as convertible terms.¹⁸

One writer suggests "assurance" as a more accurate term than "promise," because promise looks only to the future, while an assurance is independent of tenses. A warranty that a horse is sound or that a ship has sailed is a contract, but it is a peculiar use of the word to call it a promise. The word has, however, become a technical legal term, being used as synonymous with the more comprehensive term "assurance." Hariman Contr. 14.

II. AGREEMENT OR MUTUAL ASSENT.

A. Necessity For. There can be no contract in the true sense, that is, as distinguished from quasi or constructive contracts,¹⁹ in the absence of the element of agreement, or mutual assent of the parties. This above all others perhaps is an essential element of every contract.²⁰ It is necessary therefore to ascertain the elements of agreement or mutual assent.

B. Essentials of Agreement in General — 1. Two or More Parties. In the first place, it is clear that two or more parties are essential to an agreement.²¹

2. COMMON INTENTION — a. In General. It is equally clear that, in order that there may be an agreement, the parties must have a distinct intention common to both. Doubt or difference is incompatible with agreement.²² There is doubt, for example, where a person says to another, "Will you buy my horse if I am inclined to sell?" and the other says, "Possibly I will;"²³ and there is difference where a person says to another, "Will you buy my horse for one hundred dollars?" and the other says, "I will give you seventy-five for it."²⁴ The minds of the parties must meet as to all the terms.²⁵ If any portion of the proposed terms are not settled or a mode agreed upon by which they may be settled there is no agreement.²⁶

b. Expressed Intention and Secret Intention Differing. The law imputes to a person an intention corresponding to the reasonable meaning of his words and acts.²⁷ It judges of his intention by his outward expressions and excludes all questions in regard to his unexpressed intention. If his words or acts, judged by a reasonable standard, manifest an intention to agree in regard to the matter in question, that agreement is established, and it is immaterial what may be the real but unexpressed state of his mind on the subject.²⁸ On the other hand if one sought to be held as having agreed dissented in the ordinary language of business intercourse, it is an absurdity to say he did agree merely because the other party insists that he did not understand the language.²⁹

c. Communication of Intention — (i) NECESSITY FOR. To constitute an agreement, the intention of the parties must in some way or form be communicated, for a person's intention can be ascertained by another only by means of outward expressions, as words and acts. An intention not expressed, not communicated, withdrawn before communicated, or communicated only to a third person, is in general inoperative and immaterial to the question of agreement.³⁰ Telling an intention to a third person is of no more effect than noting it in one's memorandum book, which is no more than though it existed solely in one's mind.³¹

(ii) INTENTION COMMUNICATED INFORMALLY. Where the intention is communicated it does not matter what is the medium of communication or how infor-

If, whatever a man's real intention may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would believe that he was assenting to the terms proposed by the other party, and that other party upon that belief enters into the contract with him, the man thus conducting himself would be equally bound as if he had intended to agree to the other party's terms."

See also infra, VIII, B, 2.

Conflicting views.—Holland, criticizing Savigny's analysis of contract in including "an agreement of the wills of the parties" as a necessary element, maintains that the law does not require that contracting parties have a common intention, but only that they shall seem to have one; that the law looks not at the will itself but at the will as voluntarily manifested. He holds that the law does not require a union of wills but only that it shall appear so. Holland El. Jur. 228. On the other hand English and American writers generally, in defining agreement as the meeting of minds, require the wills of the parties to be the same. But if either party has manifested his agreement either by words or conduct, he is not allowed to say that he did not really agree. "A contract," says Anson, "as a legal transaction, can exist only in such a form as may be perceptible to a court of law. It is only from the words and conduct of the parties that a court can form any conclusion as to their intention. If their words or their acts are inconsistent with any supposition but that they meant to agree, or if one has so spoken or acted as to lead the other necessarily to that conclusion, the court will not permit the obvious construction of words or conduct to be denied. But, after all, it is the intention of the parties which the courts endeavour to ascertain; and it is their intention to agree which is regarded as a necessary inference from words or conduct of a certain sort." mal the words used may be.³² It may be orally or in writing, by advertisement, placard, handbill, letter, messenger, or telegram.³³

C. Offer and Acceptance — 1. IN GENERAL. Every agreement, whether written or oral, is the result of, and springs from, offer and acceptance. The written contract by which one agrees for a certain sum to sell his land to another is simply the expression of a common intention arrived at by them at a moment when the former says, "I will sell you my land" for such sum, and the latter replies, "I will take it at that price," or vice versa. So of the multiform transactions of business and social life; the sending of an order by a merchant, the arrival of the goods ordered; the taking up of a book or a basket of fruit by a person in a store; the entry by a passenger into a public conveyance, or of a person into the dining-room of a hotel or restaurant and the furnishing of a meal by the proprietor. There is always the offer and acceptance; sometimes in words alone, sometimes by act alone, sometimes by both words and act.³⁴

2. OFFER — a. Definition. An offer, as the term is used in the law of contracts, is a proposal to enter into a contract.³⁵

b. Forms of Offer — (i) IN GENERAL. The process of offer may take place in four ways: namely, where there is an offer of (1) a promise for assent; (2) an act for a promise; (3) a promise for an act; or (4) a promise for a promise.³⁶

(ii) OFFER OF PROMISE FOR ASSENT. One may offer to make a promise if the offeree will assent to it. But this kind of an offer, to result in a binding contract, can be made only under seal, as no promise without a consideration is binding upon the promisor.³⁷ Where a deed containing provisions is offered to another, the acceptance of that deed is an agreement to all the conditions contained therein.³⁸

(iii) OFFER OF ACT FOR PROMISE. The offer of an act for a promise takes place where a man offers goods or services to those who will promise to pay him for them; as for example, by the exposure of goods for sale; the sending of goods to another; the running of public conveyances, as omnibuses and street-cars; the doing of work for another with his knowledge, etc.³⁹

Almost an unlimited number of adjudicated cases could be cited in support of the proposition. It is also supported by all the standard text-books treating the subject"); Duple v. Batts, 38 Tex. 312; Short v. Treadgill, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 267; The Palo Alto, 2 Ware (U. S.) 344, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,700.

Offer and acceptance by mail or telegraph see infra, II, C, 7.

34. Anson Contr. 11. Pollock says that agreement arises from (1) the concurrence of the parties in a spoken or written form of words as expressing their common intention; or, (2) a proposal made by one or some of them and accepted by the others or other of them. When the parties execute a deed or sign a written instrument the offer and acceptance is not as clear as when a buyer and seller meet face to face and make an oral bargain. Pollock Contr. 1. But the view of Anson that the idea of offer and acceptance will practically cover both cases seems to be correct, and is admitted by Pollock, where he says that "notwithstanding the difficulties that arise in making proposal and acceptance necessary parts of the general conception of contract, there is no doubt that in practice they are the normal and most important elements." (iv) OFFER OF PROMISE FOR ACT. The offer of a promise for an act takes place in the case of advertised rewards for the recovery of property or the apprehension or detection of a criminal; in the sending of an order for goods to a merchant or manufacturer; in the request of one to another to do work for him; and similar cases.⁴⁰

(v) OFFER OF PROMISE FOR PROMISE. The offer of a promise for a promise is the common case of an offer of one to another to do something, if the other will promise to do something for him, or in consideration of his promise.⁴¹

c. Certainty of Offer—(i) IN GENERAL. To result in a contract, an offer must be certain. The parties must make their own agreement and not leave it for the court to construct one for them. If an agreement is so uncertain and ambiguous that the court is unable to collect from it what the parties intended, the court cannot enforce it, and since there is no obligation this is no contract.⁴² If an agreement is uncertain it is because the offer was uncertain or ambiguous to begin with—for the acceptance is always required to be identical with the offer or there is no meeting of minds and no agreement. If the person to whom the offer is made sees the uncertainty and proposes a change which shall make the agreement certain, this puts an end to the offer, and the agreement which he has suggested is the result of his new offer and the acceptance of the original proposer. Therefore if the offer is in any case so indefinite as to make it impossible for a court to decide just what it means, and to fix exactly the legal liability of the parties, its acceptance cannot result in an enforceable agreement.⁴³ A written agreement may be void for uncertainty because of blanks left therein,⁴⁴ or failure to name the parties,⁴⁵ or because it is so misspelled or ungrammatical, etc., that it has no meaning at all.⁴⁶

Particular agreements void for uncertainty.—The following agreements and promises have been held void for uncertainty:

An agreement to renew a lease at the end of the term, without saying for what time or at what rent. Baurman v. Binzen, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 342; Abeel v. Radcliff, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 297, 7 Am. Dec. 377.

A promise by the purchaser of a horse that, "if the horse was lucky [he] would give the defendant 5*l.* more, or the buying of another horse." Guthing v. Lynn, 2 B. & Ad. 232, 22 E. C. L. 104. See also Burks v. Stam, 65 Mo. App. 455.

An agreement to perform certain services for such remuneration as should be deemed right. Parker v. Ibbetson, 4 C. B. N. S. 346, 4 Jur. N. S. 536, 27 L. J. C. P. 236, 6 Wkly. Rep. 519, 93 E. C. L. 346; Roberts v. Smith, 4 H. & N. 315, 28 L. J. Exch. 164; Taylor v. Brewer, 1 M. & S. 290, 21 Rev. Rep. 831.

A promise to pay "good wages." Fairplay School Tp. v. O'Neal, 127 Ind. 95, 26 N. E. 686.

A promise by a man to a woman to give her one hundred acres of land if she would live with him until his marriage. Sherman v. Kitsmiller, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 45.

A promise by a man to leave a girl at his death a "child's part" of his estate (Woods v. Evans, 113 Ill. 186, 55 Am. Rep. 409); or make her "his heir" (Wallace v. Rapelye, 103 Ill. 229).

A promise to give a child a "full share" of property. Adams v. Adams, 26 Ala. 272.

A man's promise to a woman, if she would live with him as his wife, to give her a good home as long as he lived and provide for her at his death. Wall's Appeal, 111 Pa. St. 460, 5 Atl. 220, 56 Am. Rep. 288.

Promises to "aid and assist" another to get an order of court (Case v. Lennington, 3 N. J. L. 853); to use one's "best efforts" to advance the value of land (Barton v. Spinning, 8 Wash. 458, 36 Pac. 439); to pay a note "if the corn market should advance sufficiently to justify" it (Thomson v. Gortner, 73 Md. 474, 21 Atl. 371); to assist persons by indorsing their paper and advancing them the money to carry on the mercantile business advantageously (Erwin v. Erwin, 25 Ala. 236); to carry on a business as long as it should be profitable (Pulliam v. Schimpf, 109 Ala. 179, 19 So. 428); to work a mine as long as it could be made to pay (Davie v. Lumberman's Min. Co., 92 Mich. 491, 53 N. W. 625, 24 L. R. A. 357).

An agreement that a contract might be canceled for "good cause." Cummer v. Butts, 40 Mich. 322, 29 Am. Rep. 530.

Promises to "pay more if he could afford it" (Clark v. Pearson, 53 Ill. App. 310); to make "advances" without specifying any sum (Gafford v. Proskauer, 59 Ala. 264); to take a house "if put into thorough repair, and the drawing-rooms handsomely decorated according to the present style" (Taylor v. Portington, 7 De G. M. & G. 328, 3 Eq. Rep. 781, 1 Jur. N. S. 1057, 56 Eng. Ch. 328); to give the preference in renting property as long as it should be rented as a store (Delashmutt v. Thomas, 45 Md. 140); to sell land "reserving the necessary land for making a railway" (Pearce v. Watts, L. R. 20 Eq. 492, 23 Wkly. Rep. 771); to rent land to another on his paying the same rent that the promisor might be able to obtain from other parties (Gelston v. Sigmund, 27 Md. 334); to employ an actor from a certain day and "as long as the same may be mutually agreed upon" (McIntosh v. Miner, 37 N. Y. App. Div. 483, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 1074); to sell oil on such reasonable terms as to enable the purchaser to compete successfully with other parties selling in the same territory (Marble v. Standard Oil Co., 169 Mass. 553, 48 N. E. 783); to pay a party for ice to be delivered at a price which should "afford the company a net profit not to exceed one dollar per ton" (Buckmaster v. Consumers' Ice Co., 5 Daly (N. Y.) 313); and to reduce rent (Smith v. Ankrum, 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 39).

(II) NO UNCERTAINTY IF INTENTION CAN BE ASCERTAINED. An agreement cannot be held uncertain if the court can see what the parties intended and enforce the same.⁴⁷ An agreement drawn up by illiterate persons will not be held uncertain, if it is possible for the court to ascertain their meaning.⁴⁸ Absolute certainty is not required. That is certain which may be rendered certain, according to the maxim, id certum est quod certum reddi potest.⁴⁹ A promise not in itself certain may be rendered certain by a reference to something certain.⁵⁰

50. As a promise to convey a certain number of acres of land out of a large tract, the location and the method of the ascertainment being pointed out (Carpenter v. Hermann, 51 Ill. 243, 99 Am. Dec. 543); a promise to pay a teacher the same salary "as was established at the date of the con-

An offer to sell goods need not specify the price, for if no price is stated it will be presumed that the reasonable or market-price was intended. And in other like cases, when the terms are not absolutely certain, it is held that the parties have in effect referred the matter to a court or jury in case they disagree about it themselves.⁵¹ Although a contract may be too uncertain in its terms to be tract for like services by the board of directors of the school district within which the city of Portland is situated" (Caldwell v. School Dist. No. 7, 55 Fed. 372); making the promisor's liability that which may be imposed by a certain statute (Hamden v. Merwin, 54 Conn. 418, 8 Atl. 670); a promise to sell all the rye straw the promisor "had to spare," not exceeding three tons, the court saying, "If there was no other satisfactory evidence on that subject, the quantity of straw the defendant had sold to Hendrickson after the contract with the plaintiff was made, was competent evidence of the quantity he had to spare" (Parker v. Pettit, 43 N. J. L. 512); a promise to pay a certain percentage of the cost of a church site when such cost is ascertained (First Universalist Church v. Pungs, 126 Mich. 670, 86 N. W. 235); a promise to pay an attorney for his services an amount equal to that paid another attorney in the action (Lungerhausen v. Crittenden, 103 Mich. 173, 61 N. W. 270); a promise to "the heirs of Jonathan Jesup," a living person (Lockwood v. Jesup, 9 Conn. 272); an agreement to deliver so many "car loads" of a certain commodity (Schreiber v. Butler, 84 Ind. 576; Indianapolis Cabinet Co. v. Herrman, 7 Ind. App. 462, 34 N. E. 579); a promise to give a nurse "plenty after he was gone, so that she need not work" (Thompson v. Stevens, 71 Pa. St. 161); an agreement that if the holder of a policy canceled it "a fair proportion of the premiums will be returned" (Hayward v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co., 12 Daly (N. Y.) 42); a promise to supply all the goods of a certain kind the buyer might "need" or "require" in his business (see infra, IV, D, 10, h, (1); an offer by letter to sell land at "ten per acre" and two years' taxes, and an acceptance, naming amount (Northwestern Iron Co. v. Meade, 21 Wis. 474, 94 Am. Dec. 557).

Old English cases.—In an old case A in consideration that B would marry his daughter, promised that he would give her a child's portion, and that at the time of his death he would give to her as much as any of his other children, except his eldest son. This was held to be a good promise, since, although a child's portion was altogether uncertain, yet what the rest of the children except the eldest got reduced it to a sufficient certainty. Silvester's Case, Popham 148; Anonymous, 2 Rolle 104. But if a citizen of London promises a child's portion, that of itself is sufficiently certain; for by the custom there it is certain how much each child shall have. Anonymous, 2 Rolle 104, 1 Lev. 87, 88.

51. Worthington v. Beeman, 91 Fed. 232, 33 C. C. A. 475, holding that where by contract defendant gave plaintiff the exclusive sale of a manufactured article in a certain territory during a specified term, and the contract provided that in case plaintiff succeeded in doing such a business as defendant might "reasonably expect" it should be renewed for a further term, the contract was not too indefinite or uncertain in its terms, but that it would support an action for damages for a refusal of defendant to renew at the expiration of the first term, the amount of business which defendant could reasonably expect being a matter which might be determined by a jury. And see Miller v. Kendig, 55 Iowa 174, 7 N. W. 500.

Contract for joint use of railroad.—In a suit to compel specific performance of a contract with this clause, "Said party of the second part shall permit, under such reasonable regulations and terms as may be agreed upon, other railroads to use its right of way through the park and up to the terminus of its road in the City of St. Louis, upon such terms and for such fair and equitable compensation to be paid to it therefor as may be agreed upon by such companies," the court said that although the "statement is that the compensation is to be such 'as may be agreed upon by such companies,' yet the statement that it is to be 'fair and equitable' plainly brings in the element of its determination by a court of equity. If the parties agree upon it, very well, but if they do not, still the right of way is to be enjoyed upon making compensation, and the only way to ascertain what is a 'fair and equitable' compensation therefor is to determine it by a court of equity. Such is, in substance, the agreement of the parties." Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 11 S. Ct. 243, 34 L. ed. 843.

Work or things "satisfactory to promisor."—There are a few anomalous cases holding that where a person has agreed to do work or furnish a thing which shall be satisfactory to the promisor he will be intended to have left the question of satisfaction to the judgment of a court or jury. Hawkins v. Graham, 149 Mass. 284, 21 N. E. 312, 14 Am. St. Rep. 422; Mullally v. Greenwood, 127 Mo. 138, 29 S. W. 1001, 48 Am. St. Rep. 618; Duplex Safety Boiler, etc., Co. v. Garden, 101 N. Y. 387, 4 N. E. 749, 54 Am. Rep. 709; Folliard v. Wallace, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 395. The weight of authority, however, is strongly against this view. See infra, IX, C, 5, i.

Time of performance.—A contract need not state the time of performance as it will be intended that the parties meant a reasonable time. Atwood v. Cobb, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 227, 26 Am. Dec. 657; Van Woert v. Albany, etc., R. Co., 67 N. Y. 538. See IX, C, 4, b.

specifically enforced by a court of equity,⁵² it may yet be the basis of a remedy at law in favor of a party who has either wholly or partially performed it.⁵³

d. Terms of Offer—(i) IN GENERAL. One who makes an offer to enter into a contract may do so of course upon any terms he may see fit, so long as they are not illegal, and if the offer is accepted they are binding on both parties.⁵⁴ If the terms are expressed and are legal, the only difficulty is in ascertaining the intention of the parties.⁵⁵

(ii) UNEXPRESSED TERMS—(A) In General. There are many terms not actually expressed in the offer which are implied by law and are as binding on both parties after acceptance as though actually spoken or written into the contract. A contract, it may be truly said, includes not only what the parties actually wrote down or said, but all those things which the law implies as part of it, and likewise all matters which both the parties intended to express, but did not.⁵⁶

(B) Usages and Customs of Trade. Every trade, business, or calling has its usages, and persons who make offers relating thereto assume that all the customary incidents of such callings shall be part of the agreement and hence do not expressly refer to them. Although unexpressed, they are implied terms of the contract; and this is as true in the case of written as of oral contracts.⁵⁷

(iii) TERMS NOT APPEARING ON FACE OF OFFER. An offer may consist of various terms, some of which are not expressed on its face, but are contained in a document which is delivered to the other party. The person accepting the offer may or may not be bound by such terms according to the circumstances.⁵⁸

e. Communication of Offer—(i) IN GENERAL. To constitute an agreement, it is obvious that the intention of the parties must be communicated.⁵⁹ One cannot accept an offer which has not been communicated to him, and therefore as a general rule an uncommunicated offer, whether by words or acts, cannot result in a contract.⁶⁰

(ii) PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES AND OTHER ACTS WITHOUT REQUEST OR KNOWLEDGE. It follows from this principle that where services are rendered for another without his request or knowledge he cannot be held liable to pay for them. This has repeatedly been held.⁶¹ The principle which these cases estab-

52. A greater degree of certainty is required in the case of specific performance of a contract in equity than in an action upon it at law. Foster v. Kimmons, 54 Mo. 488; Belch v. Miller, 32 Mo. App. 387. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

55. Construction of contracts see infra, VIII.

56. Terms implied by law.—Thus on a sale of chattels all the warranties as to title or quality which the law implies are a part of it, although unexpressed. See SALES.

Contracts for services.—On an offer to do work or service of any kind for another, it is a part of the offer implied by law that the offeror has the skill to do the service he offers to do and that he will use that skill, etc. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Parol evidence to vary contract.—Where a contract is in writing and there was no fraud or mistake parol evidence is not admissible to add terms not expressed therein and not implied by law. See infra, VIII; and, generally, EVIDENCE. But if terms are omitted through fraud or mistake the contract may be reformed in equity and enforced according to the intention. See REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

intended to be made there is no opportunity to reject it and no presumption of acquiescence.⁶²

(III) PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES AND OTHER ACTS WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE OF OFFER. It would also seem clear that where one performs services by which another is benefited he cannot recover on the other's offer to pay for them, of which he had no knowledge when the services were rendered.⁶³ Where a person does an act for which a reward has been offered, not knowing at the time he does the act that the offer has been made, there can be no meeting of minds between the parties nor can his act be said to have been affected by the unknown offer. Hence it has been properly held that a reward cannot be claimed by one who did not know that it had been offered.⁶⁴ In some states the contrary has been held,⁶⁵ although it would seem not on logical grounds.⁶⁶

3. ACCEPTANCE OF OFFER — a. Necessity For. Before an offer can become a binding promise and result in a contract it must be accepted, either by word or act, for without this there cannot be agreement.⁶⁷

66. Some of the cases recognize such a conclusion as anomalous and contrary to principle, but sustain it on grounds of public policy. Others appear to be the result of a misunderstanding of the old English case of Williams v. Carwardine, 4 B. & Ad. 621, 625, 24 E. C. L. 274, 5 C. & P. 566, 24 E. C. L. 711, 2 L. J. K. B. 101, 1 N. & M. 418, where the plaintiff gave information as to a murder "believing that she had not long to live, and to ease her conscience." Afterward she recovered and sued for the reward and was held entitled to recover. It was not objected to the recovery that she did not know of the offer (for the report is silent as to her knowledge of it) when she gave the information, but that the reward was not the motive for her act. The court held that the motive was immaterial. See contra, Hewitt v. Anderson, 56 Cal. 476, 38 Am. Rep. 65 (where the intention to claim the reward was held essential); Burke v. Wells, 50 Cal. 218.

or any other act,⁷⁴ and other like cases.⁷⁵ Such offers, although made to an unascertained person or persons, cannot of course be turned into an agreement until they have been accepted by an ascertained person, but as soon as there is an acceptance by a person within the offer there is a binding contract.⁷⁶ No one can accept unless he falls within the class to whom the offer is made.⁷⁷

c. Forms of Acceptance—(i) ACCEPTANCE BY ASSENT. The process of acceptance, like the process of offer, may take place in several ways. In the first place, it may be by simple assent, but in this case, as we have seen, the acceptance is of no legal effect, unless the offer has been made under seal.⁷⁸ What is a sufficient consideration for a parol promise depends on the terms prescribed by the promisor and may be as various as the human mind; but it must in general be some act done or forbearance to act, or some engagement made at his request, and beneficial to him or detrimental to the promisee.⁷⁹

(ii) ACCEPTANCE BY PROMISE. An offer of a promise or an act may be accepted by giving a promise, as where a person offers to pay another a certain sum if he will do something for him on a future day, and the other accepts by promising to do so according to the conditions of the offer. Whenever the offerer (the promisor) requires that the promisee shall enter into a mutual engagement, the condition must be fulfilled, and performance will not suffice without a promise to perform.⁸⁰ The promise need not be by words but may be inferred from the acts of the parties, as by one or both acting upon it as though it were a completed agreement.⁸¹ If a person sends goods to another, and the latter uses the goods, keeps them, or deals with them as his, he will be liable on an implied promise to pay what the goods are worth, unless he had a right to suppose, and did suppose, that a gift was intended. The acceptance by their use

If a party voluntarily accepts and avails himself of valuable services rendered for his benefit, when he has the option whether to accept or reject them, even if there is no distinct proof that they were rendered by his authority or request, a promise to pay for them may be inferred. His knowledge that they were valuable and his exercise of the option to avail himself of them justify the offeree shall do a particular thing. In such a case performance is the only thing needful to complete the agreement and create a binding promise.⁸⁶ But when the offeree expressly states that he will not agree to the terms of the offer no agreement can be inferred from his acts.⁸⁷ The acts relied on may not preclude the party from showing no acceptance, or an acceptance varying from the terms of the offer.⁸⁸

(iv) ACCEPTANCE BY SILENCE. Acceptance of an offer may often be inferred from silence. If a person sends goods to another without request, we have seen that if he uses them or deals with them as his own his acceptance of them will be implied.⁸⁹ He is not bound, however, to return them, and from his mere failure to do so he cannot be charged with accepting them.⁹⁰ Silence alone does not give consent, even by estoppel, for there must not only be the right, but the duty, to speak before the failure to do so can estop a person from afterward setting up the truth.⁹¹ Certainly one person cannot impose a duty upon another and make him a purchaser in spite of himself by sending goods to him, unless he will take the trouble and bear the expense of notifying the sender that he will not buy.⁹² It is otherwise of course if the relation of the parties, their previous dealings, or other circumstances are such as to impose a duty to speak.⁹³ It has been held inference. Day v. Caton, 119 Mass. 513, 20 Am. Rep. 347; Emery v. Cobbe, 27 Nebr. 621, 43 N. W. 410. See WORK AND LABOR.

St. 307, where a person notified another by letter that an apparatus would be removed unless the other agreed to hire it at twenty dollars per annum, and the other replied that he would not pay more than ten dollars per annum. It was held that his continued use of the apparatus was not an acceptance of the offer.

88. McClure v. Times Pub. Co., 169 Pa. St. 213, 32 Atl. 293. In this case plaintiff offered defendant's manager to supply it with certain writings of certain authors for publication for a year in weekly instalments on certain terms; the manager declined to make a contract for a year, but offered to contract on other terms suggested by him. The parties separated without agreement. Subsequently defendant published in its newspaper an announcement that certain authors named, nearly all of whom were those whose writings were embraced in plaintiff's offer and with whom defendant had no contracts, would contribute to its pages during the ensuing year. It was held that such publication did not in law constitute an acceptance of plaintiff's proposal, but was at most an item of evidence to be considered in determining that question, and further that such publication did not operate as an estoppel, so as to prevent defendant from showing that plaintiff's offer was not accepted.

It was held that her omission to object in any way to the proposed diversion of the water did not constitute an estoppel barring an action to recover for such diversion.

When one sends an advertisement to a newspaper for a specific time, and the paper continues to publish it after the time has expired, no promise to pay for the continued publication can be inferred from the fact that the advertiser saw the advertisement, continued to take the paper, and did not countermand it. Dake v. Patterson, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 558; Wasilewski v. Wendell, 9 N. Y. St. 508.

93. Hobbs v. Massasoit Whip Co., 158 Mass. 194, 33 N. E. 495, where, in an action to recover for skins shipped defendant, and retained by him several months without notifying plaintiff whether he had accepted them, that although one has not ordered a newspaper or periodical to be sent to him, or his subscription has expired, yet if the paper is sent to him through the post and he takes it out and uses it, an acceptance by conduct of the offer would be inferred.⁹⁴ An offer made to another, either orally or in writing, cannot be turned into an agreement because the person to whom it is made or sent makes no reply,⁹⁵ even though the offer states that silence will be taken as consent, for the offerer cannot prescribe conditions of rejection so as to turn silence on the part of the offeree into acceptance.⁹⁶ In like manner mere delay in accepting or

it appeared that plaintiff had made several prior shipments to defendant, which it had accepted and paid for. It was held that an instruction that whether there was any prior contract or not, if defendant after receiving the skins saw fit to remain silent, having reason to suppose that plaintiff believed from its silence that it had accepted them, then if it failed to notify plaintiff he is entitled to recover, was proper. See also Gallup v. Smith, 24 Ill. 586; Emery v. Cobbey, 27 Nebr. 621, 43 N. W. 410; O'Neal v. Knippa, (Tex. 1892) 19 S. W. 1020; Nicholas v. Austin, 82 Va. 817, 1 S. E. 132. And see Day v. Caton, 119 Mass. 513, 516, 20 Am. Rep. 347, where the court said: "If a person saw day after day a laborer at work in his field doing services, which must of necessity enure to his benefit, knowing that the laborer expected pay for his work, when it was perfectly easy to notify him if his services were not wanted, even if a request were not expressly proved, such a request, . . . might fairly be inferred. But if the fact was merely brought to his attention upon a single occasion and casually, if he had little opportunity to notify the other that he did not desire the work and should not pay for it, or could only do so at the expense of much time and trouble, the same inference might not be made. The circumstances of each case would necessarily determine whether silence with a knowledge that another was doing valuable work for his benefit, and with the expectation of payment, indicated that consent which would give rise to the inference of a contract. The question would be one for the jury." See WORK AND LABOR.

E replied that he might do so for him for ten per cent of the amount recovered, to which C replied that he could not take the case on those terms. Subsequently he notified E that he was going on with the case for all the owners, to which E made no reply. C went on, notifying E of what he was doing, to which E made no objection. It was held that C was entitled to recover for his services.

96. In a well-known English case plaintiff offered by letter to buy his nephew's horse for a certain sum, adding: "If I hear no more about him, I consider the horse is mine at" that price. No answer was returned to this letter, but the nephew told an auctioneer to keep the horse out of a sale of his farm stock, as it was sold to plaintiff. The auctioneer sold the horse by mistake, and plaintiff sued him for conversion. It was held that there was no agreement to sell the horse, as no acceptance had been communicated to plaintiff and that an offer could not compel its recipient to give notice of his refusal at the peril of being held to have accepted. Felt- rejecting an offer cannot make an agreement,⁹⁷ unless the circumstances are such as to impose a duty to reply.⁹⁸

(v) ACCEPTANCE BY SIGNING PAPER CONTAINING OFFER. Where a person signs a document, he is not permitted to show that he did not know its terms, and in the absence of fraud will be bound by all its provisions.⁹⁹ Therefore when an action is brought on a written agreement which is signed by the defendant, the agreement is proved by proving his signature, and in the absence of fraud it is wholly immaterial that he has not read the agreement and does not know its contents.¹

(vi) ACCEPTANCE BY ACCEPTING PAPER CONTAINING TERMS—(A) In General. A contract may be formed by accepting a paper containing terms. If an offer is made by delivering to another a paper containing the terms of a proposed contract, and the paper is accepted, the acceptor is bound by its terms; and this is true as a rule whether he reads the paper or not.² Where an offer consists of various terms, some of which do not appear on the face of the offer, the question whether the acceptor is bound by the terms depends upon the circumstances. He is not bound as a rule by any terms which are not communicated to him.³

In order that a prospectus of a proposed publication may become a part of the contract of a subscriber for the work to be pub-

But he is bound by all the legal terms which are communicated.⁴ This question arises where a person accepts a railroad or steamboat ticket, bill of lading, warehouse receipt, or other document containing conditions.⁵ He is bound by all the conditions, whether he reads them or not, if he knows that the document contains conditions.⁶ But he is not bound by terms of which he is ignorant, even though he may know that the ticket or document contains writing, unless he knows that the writing contains terms,⁷ or unless he ought to know that it contains terms, by reason of previous dealings or experience, or by reason of the form, size, or character of the document.⁸

Rep. 564, where it was said of a ticket given for articles deposited in the cloak room at a railroad station: "If the person receiving the ticket did not see or know that there was any writing on the ticket, he is not bound by the conditions; if he knew there was writing, and knew or believed that the writing contained conditions, then he is bound by the conditions; if he knew there was writing on the ticket, but did not know or believe that the writing contained conditions, nevertheless he would be bound, if the delivery to him of the ticket in such a manner that he could see that there was writing on it was in the opinion of the jury reasonable notice that the writing contained conditions."

A bill of lading fixes the rights and liabilities of the parties when its terms have been agreed upon, and its acceptance by the consignor, without objection, is an implied assent to its terms. McMillan v. Michigan, etc., R. Co., 16 Mich. 79, 93 Am. Dec. 208. See CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 405.

The reason why the acceptor of a bill of lading is bound by its terms is because shippers generally know that the bill of lading, an ancient commercial document, contains the terms of the contract of carriage, and the ship-owner or the railroad company as the case may be is entitled to assume that the person shipping the goods has that knowledge. As pointed out by Mellish, L. J., "it is, however, quite possible to suppose that a person who is neither a man of business nor a lawyer might on some particular occasion ship goods without the least knowledge of what a bill of lading was, but in my opinion such a person must bear the consequences of his own exceptional ignorance, it being plainly impossible that business could be carried on if every person who delivers a bill of lading had to stop to explain what a bill of lading was." *Parker v. Suppl. 942], where a collecting agency which plaintiff had employed on several occasions received a claim from him to collect and sent a receipt therefor, on the back of which was printed a clause stating that they did not guarantee clients against loss from the dishonesty of an attorney or the suspension of a bank. There was nothing on the face of the receipt to call attention to such rules. Plaintiff testified that the conditions indorsed on the receipt were never brought to his attention, and it was held that he was not bound by the conditions. "The appellant," said the court, "calls our attention to a class of cases clearly distinguishable from the one under review. They relate to the construction placed upon conditions in telegraph blanks, bills of lading, shipping and express receipts and other commercial instruments of like description. In such, it has been held that the uniform character of those instruments and the nature of the business to which they relate create a presumption of knowledge of the attendant conditions and limitations, or that by using certain blank forms upon which the terms and restrictions confront the subscribing party, he is deemed to have assented to them. No such presumption exists respecting a paper purporting to be an ordinary receipt, hence the necessity of proof to establish notice to the plaintiff of the undisclosed clause of exemption from liability, which the defendant inserted in a manner not calculated to attract attention."

The vessel was wrecked by the fault of the company's servants and the plaintiff's luggage lost. The house of lords decided that the company was liable to make good the loss, since the plaintiff could not be held to have assented to a term which he had not seen, of which he knew nothing, and which was not in any way ostensibly connected with that which is printed or written upon the face of the contract presented to him.

This clause was described in the report as printed over the clauses of the receipt which were in black ink, and at right angles to them. It was itself in red ink, and looked as if it might have been impressed upon the receipt after the latter was printed by some hand or power stamp. The coloring was far from bright, and parts of it, by reason of the size of type, and by reason of its being printed across the black lines of the receipt, could not be read without the most careful inspection. It was held that the shipper was not bound by the conditions in this clause.

(F) Notice Received After Agreement. Terms brought to the acceptor's notice after the agreement is complete will not affect the agreement. If a party therefore cannot be charged with notice of the conditions contained in a paper which he accepts as containing the actual offer at the very instant it is delivered to him, even actual notice afterward will have no effect.²⁰ Upon receipt by a carrier of a parcel to be conveyed to its destination, the charges being paid or to be collected on delivery by the consignee, the contract is complete and the carrier's responsibility at once attaches, and it cannot be changed by the subsequent delivery to the customer of a bill of lading or other writing containing conditions limiting the carrier's liability, unless it appears that the intention of the parties was that the oral negotiations were simply preliminary to the formal contract which was to be contained in a bill of lading or other written instrument.²¹

20. Dale v. See, 51 N. J. L. 378, 18 Atl. 306, 14 Am. St. Rep. 688, 5 L. R. A. 583. In this case the plaintiff delivered to the defendant a quantity of silk to be dyed, and when it was returned it was found to be badly and unskilfully done. Plaintiff brought an action for the defective workmanship. The defense was that when the silk was delivered back to the plaintiff it was accompanied by a bill of charges on which was printed the notice "all claims for damage or deficiency must be made within three days from date otherwise not allowed"; that the plaintiff knew of such notice but made no claim within the time, and that by accepting the goods knowing of the notice a contract was created on the terms of the notice. But the court held that there was no consideration to support such an agreement, saying in substance: Upon a bailment of goods for work and labor upon them, the contract between the parties arises immediately upon the delivery of the goods to the bailee. That contract is that the work shall be performed with reasonable skill and care and that the work being completed they shall be returned to the owner. The bailee cannot prescribe terms on which he will return them, and an agreement of the bailee that he will make a claim for damages within a certain time lacks a consideration, for the bailee is bound to return them unconditionally. See also Brittain Dry Goods Co. v. Birkenfeld, 20 Mont. 347, 350, 51 Pac. 263, where a wholesale dry-goods dealer sold through its traveling salesman a quantity of goods at certain prices and on certain terms contained in a written memorandum signed by the salesman, and the goods were shipped, and with them the invoice on which was printed the words, "All bills become due when parties suspend payment, assign, or sell out. All goods dated ahead are merely consigned and subject to replevin until said dating has expired. Retention of goods will be considered acceptance of all the terms hereon." The customer received and held the goods without objection, and prior to the expiration of the dating he assigned. The notice, it was held, was not binding on him, as the principal had no right to modify the terms of the agreement made with the agent. That agreement fixed the rights and liabilities of both parties and could not be changed by any notice one might give to the other.

The reason is that assent before the completion of the contract is essential, and if there be not assent then to the special terms, knowledge of them later and even assent to them would not make them a part of the contract. If it were attempted to interpret it as a new agreement changing the terms of the former one this would fail because it would amount to nothing without a new consideration. See Nelson v. Hudson River R. Co., 48 N. Y. 498; Bissell v. New York Cent. R. Co., 25 N. Y. 442, 82 Am. Dec. 369; Farnham v. Camden, etc., R. Co., 55 Pa. St. 53.

(A) In General. The offerer has a right to prescribe in his offer any conditions as to time, place, quantity, mode of acceptance, or other matters which it may please him to insert in and make a part thereof, and the acceptance, to conclude the agreement, must in every respect meet and correspond with the offer, neither falling within or going beyond the terms proposed, but exactly meeting them at all points and closing with them just as they stand.²²

It was held that defendant was not bound by his offer, and that he was not bound after receiving the postal card to notify plaintiff that it was not in time.

New York.—Taylor v. Rennie, 35 Barb. 272. See Palmer v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. 63, 71, where an insurance company requested payment of an insurance premium by the insured "by return of mail or by express," and the insured mailed the money on the day he received the letter in time to leave by the evening outgoing mail, instead of by a mail which left earlier in the day. It was held that the acceptance was in time, the court saying: "The request in Skinner's letter was not that the money should be sent by the first return mail, and no one receiving such a letter residing in a city where there were several mails every day, would so understand it."

31. In a leading case in the United States supreme court, the defendant, by letter sent by the wagoner, offered to purchase flour from plaintiffs, the letter stating that the answer should be sent by the return of the wagon which brought the offer. The plaintiffs, however, mailed their acceptance to a place other than the destination of the wagon. It was held that the acceptance was not sufficient, as it was not sent to the place described. Eliason v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 225, 4 its acceptance in writing, in which case a verbal acceptance will be insufficient unless it is assented to by the offerer.³²

(II) ACCEPTANCE CONDITIONALLY OR ON TERMS VARYING FROM OFFER. An acceptance, to be effectual, must be identical with the offer and unconditional. Where a person offers to do a definite thing and another accepts conditionally or introduces a new term into the acceptance his answer is either a mere expression of willingness to treat or it is a counter proposal, and in neither case is there an agreement.³³ This is true for example where an acceptance varies from the offer

L. ed. 556. Compare, however, Tinn v. Hoffmann, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 271, where it was said that a request in the offer to reply "by return of post" did not mean that the reply should be exclusively by mail, and that a reply by telegraph, by verbal message, or by any means not later than a letter sent by mail would reach its destination would be sufficient.

Scott*, 67 N. H. 437, 32 Atl. 770); and where a person offered to conduct litigation to protect property for all persons who should register their names in a certain book kept by him, and another assented to the proposal, and received the benefit of it, but did not register as required (Northam v. Gordon, 46 Cal. 582).

ment. This acceptance has made a new agreement on the terms of the new offer.⁵¹ So although a party to an agreement may insist on the performance of a condition that it shall be reduced to writing, it is competent for him to waive the condition by recognizing his liability on the contract.⁵² But of course if the answer to an offer by letter proposes modifications, the party making the original offer must communicate his acceptance of the modifications if he proposes to hold the other as on a counter offer accepted by him.⁵³

e. Communication of Acceptance—(i) IN GENERAL. Since communication of intention is essential to an agreement,⁵⁴ an acceptance, like an offer,⁵⁵ must as a rule be communicated to the offeror or put in the course of communication by act.⁵⁶ There is a radical distinction in regard to communication between offers which ask that the offeree shall do something and offers which ask that the offeree shall promise something. In offers of the former kind communication of the acceptance is ordinarily not required; in offers of the latter kind communication of the acceptance is always essential.

(ii) ACCEPTANCE BY ACT. Where the offer is to do something if the offeree will not merely promise to do but do something, compliance with the condition of the offer by doing the act in the way prescribed is ordinarily sufficient evidence of the acceptor's assent, and it is not necessary to show that he notified the offeror that he accepted the offer and would perform the condition.⁵⁷ The reason is that the person making the offer has a right if he pleases to dispense with notice of acceptance, and if the form of the offer shows that this was not to be required then it is not necessary.⁵⁸ Offers of rewards addressed to the public by newspaper advertisement or placard are a common illustration of this class of cases.⁵⁹ So an order to ship goods becomes an agreement when the goods are shipped according to its terms without any other communication of the acceptance.⁶⁰ In like manner a binding contract is formed by the sending of an advertisement to a newspaper and its being printed therein;⁶¹ and by the signing a guaranty upon the condition that a counter agreement will be executed, and the execution of such agreement, without any notice of its execution.⁶² Where an offer, however, is made to a particular person, and is capable of acceptance by performance, the nature of the offer may be such as to imply a condition that acceptance is to be communicated.⁶³ There are many decisions to the effect that where a person offers to guaranty the payment of goods supplied by the offeree to a third person supplying the goods without giving notice to the guarantor that his offer is accepted does not in all cases create an enforceable agreement.⁶⁴

(iii) ACCEPTANCE BY PROMISE. Where the offerer, instead of offering to do something if the other party will perform and leaving the latter free to perform or not as he pleases, requires a reciprocal promise from the offeree, the latter must communicate his acceptance of the offer and thereby bind himself by an engagement from which he cannot recede or there will be no agreement; even a compliance with the terms of the offer will not suffice.⁶⁵ Communication of acceptance in such a case is not only necessary to bind the offerer, but it is also necessary to bind the offeree, and the offerer cannot make silence on the offeree's part an acceptance by a stipulation to that effect in the offer.⁶⁶ Communication of acceptance to a third person, not the offerer's agent, is of no more effect than noting it in one's memorandum book, which is no more than though it existed solely in one's mind.⁶⁷

In the leading case of White v. Corlies, 46 N. Y. 467, C wrote to W: "Upon an agreement to finish the fitting up of offices 57 Broadway in two weeks from date, you can begin at once." On receipt of this letter W at once purchased lumber and began to prepare it. The next day the proposition was countermanded by C. It was held that there was no agreement, for no notice of W's acceptance had been given to C. W had made up his mind to accept but his intention had not been communicated.

In an old case, where it was argued that where property was offered to a man at a certain price if he was pleased with it on inspection, the property passed when he had seen and approved of it, Brian, C. J., said: "It seems to me the plea is not good without showing that he had certified the other of his pleasure; for it is trite learning that the thought of man is not triable, for the devil himself knows not the thought of man; but if you had agreed that if the bargain pleased then you should have signified it to such an one, then I grant you need not have done more, for it is matter of fact." Y. B. 17 Edw. IV, 1.

66. In a leading English case plaintiff offered by letter to buy his nephew's horse for a certain sum, adding, "If I hear no more about him, I consider the horse mine" at that price. No answer was returned to this letter, but the nephew told an auctioneer to keep the horse out of a sale of his farm stock as it was sold to plaintiff. The auctioneer sold the horse by mistake and plaintiff sued him for conversion. It was held that there was no agreement to sell the horse, as no acceptance had been communicated to plaintiff, and that an offer could not compel its recipient to give notice of his refusal at the peril of being held to have accepted. *Felthouse v. Allotment of shares.—Where H applied to the agent of a company for shares, and the

(IV) MEANING OF "COMMUNICATED." When it is said that the acceptance must be "communicated" to the offerer, this does not necessarily mean that he shall have actual personal notice of it. If a person sends an offer by an agent notice of the acceptance given to that agent is sufficient, and in a variety of other ways an acceptance may be communicated without the offerer actually receiving notice of it. It is always sufficient that the offer be accepted in the mode either expressly or impliedly required by the offerer; and if the offerer requires or suggests a mode of acceptance which turns out, so far as giving actual notice to the offerer, to be insufficient or entirely nugatory it is the fault of the offerer, and the agreement is complete.⁶⁸

4. INTENTION TO AFFECT LEGAL RELATIONS — a. In General. The agreement must be of a nature to produce a binding result upon the mutual relations of the parties, therein differing from the agreement of a bench of judges or of a board of directors, which has no reference to the relations of the judges or directors one to another.⁶⁹ And the agreement must purport to produce a legally binding result, or to put it in another form the intention of the parties must refer to legal relations; it must contemplate the assumption of legal rights and duties as opposed to engagements of a social character.⁷⁰ If services are rendered or goods delivered without any intention or expectation of payment, there can be no recovery therefor.⁷¹ Where one person renders services for another, or supports another, the relationship of the parties is of great weight in determining their directors allotted shares to him, but sent the allotment letter to their own agent, and before the agent delivered the letter H withdrew his offer, it was held that if H had authorized the agent of the company to accept the allotment on his behalf there would have been a binding contract, but as he gave no such authority, there was no contract, communication by the directors to their own agent being no communication to H. In re National Sav. Bank Assoc., L. R. 4 Eq. 9, 36 L. J. Ch. 748, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 308, 15 Wkly. Rep. 754.

An application for an insurance policy was made by A in Missouri, and was mailed by the company's agent in Missouri to the office in New York. The policy was made out in New York and mailed not to A but to the Missouri agent of the company. It was held that the posting of the letter was not a communication of the acceptance to A. Horton v. New York L. Ins. Co., 151 Mo. 604, 52 S. W. 356.

The understanding of a common agent of the parties, not communicated to either, is not binding on them. Fiedler v. Tucker, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 9.

Vote of directors of corporation accepting offer.—Where a corporation wrote to a person offering to buy land for a certain amount of its stock and such person replied offering to sell for a larger amount and reserving certain rights in the land, and the directors voted to accept his proposition and directed the treasurer to deliver the stock on receipt of a deed, but the acceptance was not communicated to the other party before he withdrew his proposition, it was held that he was not a stock-holder. Cozart v. Herndon, 114 N. C. 252, 19 S. E. 158.

68. See Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285, where the plaintiff, an actress, received from the defendant, the manager of a theater, an offer to engage her for a year, and wrote a note accepting the offer, which she placed in a letter-box on the door of his office. It was proven that this box was used for depositing contracts between the management and the actors. The defendant denied that he had ever received the letter. "This," said the court, "is immaterial." The minds of the parties met when the plaintiff complied with the usual or even occasional practice and left the acceptance in a place of deposit recognized as such by the defendant. This doctrine is analogous to that which has been adopted in the case of communication by letter or by telegraph. The principle governing these cases is that there is a concurrence of the minds of the parties upon a distinct proposition manifested by an overt act. The deposit in the box is such an act.

Loco parentis.—The same rule applies where one of the parties, whether a relative or not related at all, stands toward the other in loco parentis, as in the case of grandfather and grandchild (Dodson v. McAdams, 96 N. C. 149, 2 S. E. 453, 60 Am. Rep. 408; Hudson v. Lutz, 50 N. C. 217 [with which, however, compare Hauser v. Sain, 74 N. C. 552]; Barhites' Appeal, 126 Pa. Settegast, 36 Tex. 296; Tyler v. Burrington, 39 Wis. 376); foster parent and child after the latter's majority (Finch v. Finch, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 673, 4 Cinc. L. Bul. 908). And see PARENT AND CHILD.

Relatives and others being members of family.—Most of the courts go even further than this and hold that the principle applies whenever the parties are nearly related, or where, though distantly related or not related at all, they are members of the same family, and the services consist either in household or other family duties by one party, or support and maintenance by the other. Disbrow v. Durand, 54 N. J. L. 343, 24 Atl. 545, 33 Am. St. Rep. 678. The rule has been applied, for example, in the case of grandfather and grandchild (Jackson v. Jackson, 96 Va. 165, 31 S. E. 78); brothers (State v. Connaway, 2 Houst. (Del.) 206); sisters (Van Kuren v. Saxton, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 547, 5 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 566); brother and sister (Price v. Price, 101 Ky. 28, 39 S. Contrary doctrine.—In some states it is held that this doctrine does not apply except in the case of parent and child or a person in loco parentis, the presumption in other cases, unless rebutted by the special circumstances, being that compensation was intended. It has been so held in the case of brother and sister (Shubart's Estate, 154 Pa. St. 230, 26 Atl. 202; Mayfaith's Appeal, (Pa. 1885) 2 Atl. 28); aunt and nephew (Thurston v. Perry, 130 Mass. 240; Brown's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 428); uncle and nephew (Fox's Estate, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 258); granduncle and grandnephew (Michael's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 321); father-in-law and son-in-law (Smith v. Milligan, 43 Pa. St. 107); mother-in-law and son-in-law (Gerz v. Demarra, 162 Pa. St. 530, 29 Atl. 761, 42 Am. St. Rep. 842).

A contractual intention may be shown in all cases, notwithstanding the relationship of the parties, and it may be shown by circumstances. A contract will be implied notwithstanding the relationship where it appears that there was hope of compensation on one side and expectation to award it on the other. Huffman v. Wyrick, 5 Ind. App. 183, 31 N. E. 823. As to the sufficiency of the evidence to show contractual intention see the following cases: Grandfather and grandchild (McNab v. Stewart, 12 Minn. 407, holding that where the grandfather of a child, at the request of her father, took her into his own family to care for her, when of tender years, a contract on the part of the father to pay for such care would be implied, in the absence of an understanding to the contrary; Hauser v. Sain, 74 N. C. 552; In re Kneass' Estate, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 353, 24 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 245; Jackson v. Jackson, 96 Va. 165, 31 S. E. 78); brother and sister (Collyer v. Collyer, 113 N. Y. 442, 21 N. E. 114, 22 N. Y. St. 723; Woodward v. Bugsbee, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 128, 4 Thoms. & C. (N. Y.) 393; Briggs v. Briggs, 46 Vt. 571); uncle and nephew (Morton v. Rainey, 82 Ill. 215, 25 Am. Rep. 311, holding that the presumption that a nephew's services, while living in the family of his uncle after attaining his majority, were intended to be gratuitous, was rebutted by proof that he furnished his own clothes and paid his own medical bills; Puterbaugh v. Puterbaugh, 7 Ind. App. 280, 33 N. E. 808, 34 N. E. 611; Moist's Appeal, 74 Pa. St. 166); uncle and niece (Quigly v. Harold, 22 Ill. App. 269; Brown v. Yaryan, 74 Ind. 305; Shane v. Smith, 37 Kan. 55, 14 Pac. 477; Wall's Appeal, 111 Pa. St. 460, 5 Atl. 220, 56 Am. Rep. 288); aunt and nephew (Fox's Estate, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 258); stepfather and stepson (Davis v. Gallagher, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 593, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 11, 29 N. Y. St. 882); stepfather and stepdaughter (Ellis v. Carey, 74 Wis. 176, 42 N. W. 252, 17 Am. St. Rep. 125, 4 L. R. A. 55); father-in-law and Compare Wallace v. Schaub, 81 Md. 594, 32 Atl. 324, holding that the fact that a decedent had boarded with plaintiff for a number of years under contract did not make him a member of the plaintiff's family, so as to rebut the presumption of liability for services performed by plaintiff in nursing him, there being no relationship whatever between the parties.

If there is no contractual intention when the services are rendered or support furnished there can be no recovery. See the cases cited supra, note 71.

Charitable motives.—One who has boarded and lodged another from charitable motives cannot afterward recover therefor. University Trustees v. McNair, 37 N. C. 605.

Where one goes to live with another apparently as a friend, and so continues to live during his life, although sufficient as a consideration for an express promise, such a walk, or read a book together is not an agreement in a legal sense, "for it is not meant to produce nor does it produce any new legal duty or right or any change in existing ones."⁷³

c. Jokes or Jests. An offer, although formal and complete, cannot be the foundation of an agreement where it is made and accepted, not with the intention to contract, but as a mere jest or joke.⁷⁴ But a person cannot set up that he was merely jesting when his conduct and words would warrant a reasonable person in believing that he intended a real agreement.⁷⁵

d. Statements of Intention and Promissory Expressions. A mere statement of intention, or as it is sometimes called a "promissory expression," made without intention to contract, is not such an offer as may be turned into an agreement by acceptance.⁷⁶ The statement must import a willingness to be bound, which does not arise, it is clear, where a man says, "I mean to sell this property if I can get one hundred dollars for it."⁷⁷ Hence it is clear that all statements made by a person in the form of an offer are not such offers as in the eye of the law admit of being turned into binding promises by acceptance. The limits of this principle are not easy to define; but one must in all cases inquire whether the terms of the offer and the circumstances under which it was made were such as to give the person a right to act on it as a real and intentional offer.⁷⁸ Statements of inten-promise must be direct, clear, and positive, in order to sustain an action on it. Hartman's Appeal, 3 Grant (Pa.) 271.

78. Cases in which the statement was held not an offer.—Where defendant, while he and his family were in deep affliction over the murder of his son, and he himself was laboring under the effect of severe wounds received from the same persons who had killed his son, said, when the arresting of the persons who had perpetrated the outrage was spoken of, that he would give two hundred dollars to have them arrested, and plaintiff, who was present, made the arrest and claimed the reward, it was held that there was no offer. "What is called an offered reward," said the court, "was nothing but a strong expression of his feelings of anxiety for the arrest of those who had so severely injured him, and this greatly increased by the distracted state of his own mind and that of his family; as we frequently hear persons exclaim, 'Oh! I would give a thousand dollars if such an event were to happen,' or, vice versa. No contract can be made out of such expressions; they are evidence of strong excitement, but not of a contracting intention." Stamper v. Temple, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 113, 116, 44 Am. Dec. 296. See also Kirksey v. Kirksey, 8 Ala. 131 (where A wrote to the widow of his brother, living sixty miles distant, that if she would come and see him he would let her have a place to raise her family, and shortly after she removed to A's residence, and he for two years furnished her with a comfortable residence, and then required her to give it up);

tion made to third persons cannot generally be considered as offers.⁷⁹ It is in such cases for the jury to decide whether what was said was a mere loose statement of intention or was intended as a legal offer.⁸⁰ Representations made during the negotiation of a contract which are not included in the final agreement are not a part of it and are not binding.⁸¹ So a mere request, where there is no legal liability in the party to have the service performed or the thing done, and it is not for his benefit, is not an offer to pay for what is done in pursuance of the request.⁸²

Higgins v. Lessig, 49 Ill. App. 459 (where defendant, from whom an old harness worth fifteen dollars had been stolen, on discovering his loss, excitedly exclaimed: "I will give $100 to any man who will find out who the thief is"); Topliff v. McKendree, 88 Mich. 148, 55 N. W. 109 (holding that to say "I guess I can ship it to you," cannot be construed as an offer to ship); Westerveit v. Demarest, 46 N. J. L. 37, 50 Am. Rep. 400 (where the directors of a bank published in a newspaper, "Directors and stockholders are personally responsible for all its debts," and it was held not to create a contract with depositors); Weeks v. Tybald, Noy 11, Rolle Abr. 6 (where defendant told plaintiff that he would give one hundred dollars to him who married his daughter with his consent, and plaintiff did so and brought an action for the one hundred dollars, and it was held not to be reasonable that a man should be bound by general words spoken to excite suitors); Randall v. Morgan, 12 Ves. Jr. 67, 8 Rev. Rep. 289 (where a person, in answer to a suitor for his daughter, wrote: "Whether Mary remains single or marries I shall allow her the interest of 2000*l*. If the latter I may bind myself to do it and pay the principal at my decease to her and her heirs").

Cases in which the statement was held an offer.—On the other hand where a man standing in front of a burning building shouted to the crowd: "I will give $5,000 to any person who will bring the body of my wife out of that building, dead or alive," it was held that there was a binding contract with one of the firemen who entered the building and brought out the woman. Reif v. Paige, 55 Wis. 496, 13 N. W. 473, 42 Am. Rep. 731. And see McClure v. Wilson, 43 Ill. 356, 363 (Wilson v. McClure, 50 Ill. 366), where, at a public meeting during the war, a man declared that he would give four hundred dollars to get his sons relieved from the draft, and it was held that there was a binding promise to pay that amount to any one who should accomplish that object. "If," said Breeze, J., "I have valuable property in imminent danger, and I make proclamation that I will give fifty dollars to save it, and a stranger undertakes the labor and does save it, on what principle of law or justice is it that I should not pay? So, here, the defendant declared he would give four hundred dollars to save his sons from the draft, and put the declaration in writing. The plaintiff incurred the expense and trouble necessary to save his sons, and did save them; why then should he not be paid the amount promised?" See also Patton v. Hassinger, Missouri.—Meisenbach v. Southern Cooper-age Co., 45 Mo. App. 232, where it was said,

e. Proposals to Deal. If a proposal is nothing more than an invitation to the person to whom it is made to make an offer to the proposer, it is not such an offer as can be turned into an agreement by acceptance. Proposals of this kind, although made to definite persons and not to the public generally, are merely invitations to trade; they go no further than what occurs when one asks another what he will give or take for certain goods. Such inquiries may lead to bargains, but do not make them. They ask for offers which the proposer has a right to accept or reject as he pleases.⁸²

f. Advertisements of Goods For Sale. Similarly business advertisements published in newspapers and circulars sent out by mail or distributed by hand, stating that the advertiser has a certain quantity or quality of goods which he wants to dispose of at certain prices, are not offers which become contracts as soon as any person to whose notice they may come signifies his acceptance by notifying the other that he will take a certain quantity of them; but they are simply invitations to all persons who may read them that the advertiser is ready to receive offers for the goods at the price stated.⁸⁴ It must be remembered, however, that in substance, that, if one calls in a physician and requests him to perform services for another, no implied promise to pay for them arises, unless his relation to the patient is such as to make a legal obligation on his part to provide a physician—as where a husband calls in a physician to attend a wife or a father his minor child.

Illustrations.—In an Iowa case plaintiff wrote defendant inquiring whether he was the owner of certain lots of land and asking the price, and the defendant replied: "The lots are so incumbered it would be difficult to make title at once. Price, $1,700 and

$1,500, net, and cheap." Plaintiff replied: "I will take the lots on the terms proposed by you in it [your letter] and herewith send you draft for $100 on account of the bargain. The balance of the money is ready, and will be paid immediately on good, clear title being made." Defendant returned the draft and plaintiff brought suit on an alleged contract to sell the lots. It was held that there was no agreement, the court saying: "We do not understand the letter to contain a proposition to sell the lots. The mere statement of the price at which property is held cannot be understood as an offer to sell. The seller may desire to choose the purchaser, and may not be willing to part with his property to any one who offers his price. We regard the correspondence, . . . as amounting, on defendant's part, simply to a negotiation, and not to a binding offer. It required the acceptance by him of the offer contained in plaintiff's last letter to create a binding contract." Knight v. Cooley, 34 Iowa 218, 221. See also Lincoln v. Erie Preserving Co., 132 Mass. 129 (where A, who had acted as a broker for B, and also dealt with him on his own account, telegraphed him as follows: "Telegraph how much corn you will sell with lowest cash price," to which B replied: "Three thousand cases, one dollar five cents, open one week," to which A replied: "Sold corn, will see you to-morrow"); Moulton v. Kershaw, 59 Wis. 316, 18 N. W. 712, 48 Am. Rep. 516 (where defendant wrote plaintiff: "We are authorized to offer Michigan fine salt, in full car-load lots of eighty to ninety-five bbls., delivered at your city, at 85c. per bbl.," and plaintiff thereupon telegraphed "Your letter . . . received and noted. You may ship me two thousand (2000) barrels Michigan fine salt, as offered in your letter," and it was held not to make an agreement, defendant's letter being simply a notice to those dealing in salt that he was in a position to consider offers for the article at the prices named).

in all these cases the question is one of intention; and that whether or not such transactions are to be construed as agreements depends on the intention of the parties as collected from the language used and the nature of the transaction.⁸⁵

g. Invitations to Bid. In like manner, where a person or a corporation advertises for bidders for property to be sold or for work to be done, it is well settled that this is simply an invitation to make offers—to make tenders—as it is often called, and that the advertiser is not obliged to accept the highest or lowest or any of the bids.⁸⁶ So a response to a proposal for exhibitors to show their wares at a public exhibition has been held not to make an agreement.⁸⁷

h. Railroad and Steamship Time-Tables. It has been held by some courts, but not by all, that a time-table published by a railroad or steamboat company is an offer to the public generally that if they will apply for a ticket for carriage they will be carried as stated in the table,⁸⁸ and the offer is accepted by each person who applies for a ticket.⁸⁹

23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237, 19 Wkly. Rep. 48 (holding that an announcement that goods would be sold by tender was “a mere attempt to ascertain whether an offer can be obtained within such a margin as the sellers are willing to adopt”).

“A bookseller’s catalogue, with prices stated against the names of the books, would seem to contain a number of offers. But if the bookseller receives by the same post five or six letters asking for a particular book at the price named, to whom is he bound? To the man who first posted his letter of acceptance? How is this to be ascertained? The catalogue is clearly an invitation to do business, and not an offer.” Anson Contr. 40.

Ybarra, 3 Cal. 147 (where defendant, who had a crop of growing grapes, offered to pick from the vines and deliver to plaintiff at defendant’s vineyard so many grapes then growing in said vineyard as plaintiff should wish to take during the year at ten cents per pound, and it was held that, when plaintiff while the offer was in force named the quantity there was a contract binding both parties as to the quantity named); College Mill Co. v. Fidler, (Tenn. Ch. 1899) 58 S. W. 382 (where a firm in another place wrote to a mill company stating that it could buy bran at home for eight dollars per ton, asking if they could sell at that price, and if so to wire them as they had an order to fill, and the mill company replied that it could sell bran at seven dollars per ton f.o.b. and hoped to receive the order, and the firm on receipt of this telegraphed: “Ship 50 tons as per your letter,” and it was held a binding agreement, although the offer did not state the quantity proposed to be sold).

The acceptance of the bid makes the contract (Garfield v. U. S., 93 U. S. 242, 23 L. ed. 779) in accordance with the terms of the proposals (Hughes v. Clyde, 41 Ohio St. 339); but the parties may state the exact agreement as they please in a subsequently executed written document (Taylor v. Fox, 16 Mo. App. 527; Megrath v. Gilmore, 10 Wash. 339, 39 Pac. 131).

A circular issued by the government, in connection with an advertisement for proposals, required a guaranty that the bidder would not withdraw his proposal within sixty days. It was held that the United States could not after that time, as against the bidder, accept the bid. Haldane v. U. S., 69 Fed. 819, 32 U. S. App. 607, 16 C. C. A. 447.

i. Advertisement of Auction Sales. An advertisement of a sale by auction is not an offer, so as to become a contract with persons attending at the place advertised, binding the advertiser to sell the property, or to sell on the terms advertised, but is a mere statement of intention.⁹⁰

j. Advertisement of Theaters and Shows. The same principle would seem to apply to advertisements of public performances at theaters and other places.⁹¹

k. Announcement of Examination For Scholarship. A public announcement that an examination for a scholarship will be held is not an offer to award it to the competitor obtaining the most marks.⁹²

l. Negotiations Looking to Formal Contract. Where parties are merely negotiating as to the terms of an agreement to be entered into between them, there is no meeting of minds while such agreement is incomplete. Thus where they intend that their verbal negotiation shall be reduced to writing as the evidence of the terms of their agreement, there is nothing binding on them until the writing is executed.⁹³ And the same is true in other cases of preliminary

91. The only case, apparently, which touches at all upon this question is a Missouri case in which it was held that the proprietor of a theater who advertises the price of reserved seats during a certain period, and that the sale of seats will begin at a given hour, is not bound to sell any seat for the entire period to the first person who presents himself and tenders the advertised price. The court said that even if the advertisement had offered the choice of seats to the first comer, and the plaintiff had got there first, but the proprietor out of mere caprice had determined to close the house, to throw it open to the public, or to hold a prayer-meeting during the week advertised, plaintiff could only recover, if at all, for the negotiation. An agreement to be finally settled must comprise all the terms which the parties intend to introduce. Contract for work.—It has been held, did intend a subsequent agreement to be made is strong evidence that they did not intend the previous negotiations to amount to an agreement.⁹⁵ The rule applies where blanks are left in a written draft, not through mistake, but because the parties are not ready to fill them.⁹⁶ And if the terms of a contract are agreed upon and a paper signed in blank by one of the parties, who leaves it to the other party to fill up, and the latter fills it up in a different manner from that agreed upon, the paper can have no force as an agreement.⁹⁷ If it is understood that a contract signed by two parties is also to be executed by a third party, there is no contract until this is done.⁹⁸ On the other hand an agreement to make and execute a certain written agreement, the terms of which are mutually understood and agreed upon, is in all respects as valid and obligatory as the written contract itself would be if executed. If therefore it appears that the minds of the parties have met, that a proposition for a contract has been made by one party and accepted by the other, that the terms of this contract are in all respects definitely understood and agreed upon, and that a part of the mutual understanding is that a written contract embodying these terms shall be drawn and executed by the respective parties, this is an obligatory agreement.⁹⁹ however, that if the terms proposed by two parties to each other constitute a complete contract by which the one party is to do for the other a definite work at a certain time and to receive a specified rate of remuneration, it is not the less a binding contract which will subject the party who is to do the work to an action for not doing it, because at the time the terms were accepted something remained to be disclosed as to the nature of the work, upon which it might depend whether there might not be a legal justification for refusing to perform it. Lara v. General Apothecaries' Co., 26 L. J. Exch. 225.

Contract by correspondence.—"A valid contract may doubtless be made by correspondence, but care should always be taken not to construe as an agreement letters which the parties intended only as a preliminary negotiation. The question in such cases always is, did they mean to contract by their correspondence, or were they only settling the terms of an agreement into which they proposed to enter after all its particulars were adjusted, which was then to be formally drawn up and by which alone they designed to be bound?" Lyman v. Robinson, 14 Allen (Mass.) 242, 254. See also Strobridge Lithographing Co. v. Randall, 73 Fed. 619, 622, 19 C. C. A. 611, where it was said: "Whether correspondence with the purpose of entering into a contract is merely preliminary negotiation or the contract itself must be determined by the language used and the circumstances known to both parties under which the communications in writing were had. If it is plain from the language used that some term which either party desires to be in the contract is not included or definitely expressed in the correspondence relied upon, no contract is made. If it is plain from the language that either party wishes or contemplates that another person, not a party to the correspondence, shall be a party to the contract, a correspondence as to the terms of such a tripartite agreement between two cannot be a completed contract between the two. It is as essential that all the parties intended shall be bound as it is that all the terms intended should be definitely agreed upon."

An agreement may be deduced from correspondence, although it does not contain an express acceptance of terms by the purchaser and agreement to pay; the seller several times averring a contract, and the purchaser never denying it, but many times tacitly and several times expressly admitting it, and merely asserting as cause of postponement of performance the lack of ready money. Haines v. Dearborn, 199 Pa. St. 474, 49 Atl. 319.

Circumstances to be considered.—In determining which view is entertained in any particular case the following circumstances may be looked at: whether the contract is of that class which is usually found to be in writing; whether it is of such nature as to need a formal writing for its full expression; whether it has few or many details; whether the amount involved is large or small; and whether the negotiations themselves indicate that a written draft is contemplated as the final conclusion of the negotiations. If a written draft is proposed, suggested, or referred to during the negotiations, it is some evidence that the parties intended it to be the final closing of the contract. Mississippi, etc., Steamship Co. v. Swift, 86 Me. 248, 29 Atl. 1063, 41 Am. St. Rep. 545.

The burden of proof is upon the party who maintains that the agreement was completed without the necessity of the execution of a formal written instrument. Mississippi, etc., Steamship Co. v. Swift, 86 Me. 248, 29 Atl. 1063, 41 Am. St. Rep. 545. See infra, XII, I, 2.

Distinction between mere option and contract.—An accepted proposal by a person to furnish another all the property of a certain kind which may be needed in the latter's factory for a certain period is not a mere option only, which may be withdrawn at any time, but is a contract binding for the stipulated

the offer is under seal,¹¹ or the agreement to hold it open is supported by a consideration.¹² But the offer is a continuing offer until it is withdrawn, and the withdrawal communicated, and if it is accepted, and the acceptance is communicated before the offer is withdrawn and notice thereof given, and within the time expressly or impliedly limited, the agreement is complete, and the offer is no longer revocable.¹³

(IV) CONSIDERATION FOR GIVING TIME. These cases of "refusals" of lands or goods for a certain time, or "options" to purchase within a certain time,¹⁴ are offers irrevocable in their nature in two cases, viz.: (1) where the offer has become a promise by being founded on a consideration, and (2) where it has become a promise because it is made under seal.¹⁵ Where the offer is founded on a consideration, as where something is paid or promised for the option or refusal, the offer cannot be withdrawn, but continues in force until the expiration of the time limited for its acceptance.¹⁶ Where the offer is in a lease and gives the

14. Definition and nature of option.— "The obligation by which one binds himself to sell, and leaves it discretionary with the other party to buy, is what is termed in law an option, which is simply a contract by which the owner of property agrees with another person that he shall have a right to buy the property at a fixed price within a certain time. Ide v. Leiser, 10 Mont. 5, 24 Pac. 695, 24 Am. St. Rep. 17. In such contract two elements exist: First, the offer to sell, which does not become a contract until accepted; second, the completed contract to leave the offer open for the specified time. These elements are wholly independent and cannot be treated together without great liability to confusion and error. Litz v. Goosling, 93 Ky. 185, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 91, 19 S. W. 527, 21 L. R. A. 127. Thus in an agreement for a lease, there was inserted a further agreement that the landlord would, if required within two years, sell the tenant the fee of the land at a certain price, at the tenant's option. The lease was forfeited by reason of a breach of the agreement to insure, and the court held that the agreement to sell was a separate agreement and would be specifically enforced, notwithstanding the forfeiture of the lease. Green v. Low, 22 Beav. 625, 2 Jur. N. S. 848, 4 Wkly. Rep. 669." Black v. Maddox, 104 Ga. 157, 162, 30 S. E. 723.

Nicodemus*, 42 Md. 236, 246, where plaintiffs, the owners of a distillery, and defendant signed a paper in which plaintiffs agreed that defendant might purchase the distillery during the year 1871 for five thousand dollars, defendant agreeing that he would pay plaintiffs one thousand dollars if he did not buy during the year for the privilege. The court said: "It is not a bargain and sale of the property at $5000, but a proposition and obligation on the part of the plaintiffs, to sell it to the defendant at that price with the privilege to him to make the purchase or not, as he may determine within the year. For this option, which was a valuable privilege, he agrees to pay the $1000 in the event of his declining to make the purchase. The defendant acquired the right under the contract, to purchase the property for the proposed price. The plaintiffs had obligated themselves to sell at that price; but the defendant was under no obligation to buy. He merely bound himself to pay the $1000 for the privilege of buying, and in case he did not buy. It was entirely optional with the defendant to purchase the property or let it alone; whilst the plaintiffs had abandoned the right to make sale to any one else during the year."

Oregon.—House v. Jackson, 24 Oreg. 89, 32 Pac. 1027.

Tennessee.—Bradford v. Foster, 87 Tenn. 4, 9 S. W. 195, holding that a written agreement by which complainants agreed to relieve respondents from furnishing sureties on lessee the right to purchase within a certain time for a certain price, the lease is a sufficient consideration to make the offer binding.¹⁷ It has been suggested that there can be no meeting of minds by an acceptance after the offer has been revoked and the revocation communicated to the offeree; that there can therefore be no contract of sale which can be enforced, but that the offeror is simply liable in damages for the breach of his agreement to keep the offer open.¹⁸ But the correct view would seem to be that where the offer is under seal or is founded on a consideration, it has become more than an offer; it has become a promise upon condition. And as a promise cannot be revoked without the consent of the promisee, although the latter may not perform the condition of accepting within the time limited, yet if he does he is entitled to demand performance.¹⁹

(v) OFFER UNDER SEAL—(A) In General. An offer under seal cannot be revoked, at common law. Even though it is not communicated to the offeree it remains open for his acceptance when he becomes aware of its existence. This results from the common-law rule that a grant under seal is binding on the grantor and those who claim under him, although it has never been communicated to the grantee, if it has been duly delivered; and an obligation created by deed is on the same footing. The promisor is bound, but the promisee need not take advantage of the promise unless he chooses.²⁰

(B) Options Under Seal. The common-law rule that where an offer is made under seal it cannot be revoked applies to options given under seal. The seal notes given for land sold at public sale under a decree and respondents agreed to give complainants the privilege of buying the land from them at a specified price and within a specified time, if they should elect so to do, was not void, as without consideration, on the ground that complainants could not be compelled to purchase the land and therefore ought not to be compelled to sell it, as the contract was an offer to sell, standing for a given time, and supported by a consideration.

W. 195; the court in the first case saying: "The doctrine of the earlier English and American cases, in which it was held that the want of mutuality of obligation and remedy would render the contract incapable of specific enforcement, has, by the more modern cases, been so modified, that optional agreements to convey, without any corresponding obligation or covenant to purchase, will now be specifically enforced, in equity, if made upon sufficient and valuable consideration. And so, where the agreement to convey is a part of a lease or other contract between the parties, for which the agreement to convey forms the true consideration, the want of mutuality will not avoid the contract. b. Revocation of Acceptance. An acceptance may be revoked by a communication to that effect before the acceptance is communicated, but not after.²²

c. Communication of Revocation—(1) IN GENERAL. We have seen that to make an acceptance operative, it is not always necessary that it shall be actually communicated, but it is sufficient if the offeree does that which the offerer has expressly or impliedly indicated as the mode of acceptance which he will require.²³ The revocation of an offer, however, must ordinarily be communicated to prevent an acceptance from changing it into a binding contract, and it is not communicated to the offeree unless it is actually brought to his knowledge.²⁴ Formal

But as we shall see the law in England and in the United States, except in Massachusetts, makes the posting of the acceptance equivalent to communication, so that to post a second letter a moment after the first is mailed, or to send a telegram to the offerer, informing him that the acceptance just mailed is revoked, will be of no avail. notice, however, is not always necessary. It is sufficient that the person making the offer does some act inconsistent with it, as for example selling the property, and that the person to whom the offer was made has knowledge of it.²⁵ This question will be further considered in treating of offer and acceptance through the post-office.²⁶

(II) GENERAL OFFERS. A general offer to the public may be revoked and the revocation be effective without actual notice to the party who may afterward accept it without knowing of its revocation or withdrawal. It is only essential that the revocation be made in the same way as the offer was made, and the latter thereupon comes to an end. A published reward for the arrest of a criminal may be revoked in this way.²⁷ "True," said the court in this case, "it is found

The English case of Cooke v. Oxley, 3 T. R. 653, 1 Rev. Rep. 783, has been misunderstood by more than one court. In that case the declaration was that the defendant proposed to sell and deliver a certain number of hogsheads of tobacco to the plaintiff at a certain price, whereupon the plaintiff desired the defendant to give him time to agree to or dissent from the proposal till the hour of four in the afternoon of that day, to which the defendant agreed, and thereupon promised the plaintiff to sell and deliver the tobacco upon the terms aforesaid, if the plaintiff would agree to purchase the same and give notice to the defendant before four in the afternoon of that day. The plaintiff then averred that he agreed to purchase the tobacco and give notice thereof to the defendant before the hour of four arrived, and offered to pay the price, but that the defendant refused to comply with his promise. A verdict having been rendered for the plaintiff the judgment was arrested. Some American judges, construing the decision to be that where an offer gives a specified time for acceptance an acceptance within that time does not make a binding agreement, have ruled, citing it as authority, that notice of the revocation of an offer is not necessary. See Bean v. Burbank, 16 Me. 458, 33 Am. Dec. 681; Tucker v. Woods, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 190, 7 Am. Dec.

305; Gillespie v. Edmonston, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 553. But the decision turned on a point of pleading. The contract declared on, that the defendant would give the plaintiff until four in the afternoon to decide, was clearly not a binding contract at all, and the declaration did not show with sufficient distinctness that the defendant had not withdrawn the offer before the plaintiff notified him of the acceptance. The case is explained in a later English case, where the court says in substance: All that Cooke v. Oxley, 3 T. R. 653, 1 Rev. Rep. 783, affirms is, that a party who gives time to another to accept or reject a proposal is not bound to wait till the time expires. The offer may be revoked before acceptance. If the offer is not retracted, it is in force as a continuing offer till the time for accepting or rejecting it has arrived. Stevenson v. McLean, 5 Q. B. D. 346, 49 L. J. Q. B. 701, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 897, 28 Wkly. Rep. 916. And in Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Bartlett, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 224, 228, Fletcher, J., says: "The case of Cooke v. Oxley, 3 T. R. 653, 1 Rev. Rep. 783, . . . has been supposed to be inaccurately reported; and that in fact there was in that case no acceptance. But, however that may be, if the case has not been directly overruled, it has certainly in later cases been entirely disregarded, and cannot now be considered as of any authority." And see as to this case Anson Contr. 34.

Harper*, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 158, for a case of retraction by conduct.

Where an offerer fixed a place of meeting at which the offeree was to accept or reject the offer, it was held that the offer was not withdrawn by the offerer's failing to be present. Omer v. Farlow, 46 Ill. App. 122.

that then, and at all times until the arrest was actually made, he was ignorant of the withdrawal; but that is an immaterial fact. The offer of the reward not having been made to him directly, but by means of a published Proclamation, he should have known that it could be revoked in the manner in which it was made." The same rule applies to changes in the published time-table of a railroad or steamboat company and like cases.²⁸

6. LAPSE OF OFFER — a. By Rejection, Conditional or Varying Acceptance, or Counter Offer. If an offer is rejected, either by an absolute refusal or by an acceptance conditionally or not identical with the terms of the offer,²⁹ or by a counter proposal, the party making the original offer is relieved from liability on that offer, and the party who has rejected the offer cannot afterward, at his own option, convert the same offer into an agreement by a subsequent acceptance. For that purpose he must have the renewed consent of the person who made the offer.³⁰ Where one submits to another for signature a draft of a contract and the latter alters it and then signs and returns it, the first draft is a rejected proposal and the altered form is a counter proposition which is not a binding agreement until accepted by the party to whom it is returned.³¹ Where an offer made by telephone is answered by a different proposal, the offer is rejected, although a letter subsequently arrives accepting the offer as made.³² Where two offers are made of the same thing, one in writing and the other orally, an acceptance of the former is a rejection of the latter.³³ To constitute a rejection of the offer there must be a distinct refusal or counter proposition.³⁴ An immaterial condition in an acceptance is not a rejection.⁸⁵ If the acceptance is complete a request that a formal contract be drawn up embodying the terms of the agreement is immaterial.⁸⁶

b. By Lapse of Time—(i) IN GENERAL.⁸⁷ An offer comes to an end at the expiration of the time given for its acceptance; a limitation of time within which an offer is to run being equivalent to the withdrawal of the offer at the end of the time named.⁸⁷ Where no time is fixed in the offer it expires at the end of a reasonable time.⁸⁸ What is a reasonable time depends largely on the nature of the App. 221), by the expression of a hope by the seller of property in his letter accepting the buyer's offer that the buyer will pay a greater sum for it when hauled (Phillips v. Moor, 71 Me. 78), by a statement in a letter of acceptance that the acceptor would have liked something different from what is proposed and accepted (Brown v. Cairns, 63 Kan. 693, 66 Pac. 1033), or by an acceptance of an offer to buy real estate, providing that the vendor shall have a reasonable time to vacate the premises (Cavender v. Waddingham, 5 Mo. App. 457). See also Johnson v. Talley, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 248, where A, as agent of B, offered C that if he would dismiss a suit B would pay him five hundred dollars, and he, A, would pay him five hundred dollars, and C accepted except as to A paying him five hundred dollars and dismissed the suit, and it was held a binding agreement as to B and C.

particular offer and the circumstances of the case.³⁹ An offer to buy or sell land would not require so prompt an acceptance as an offer to buy or sell chattels, corporate stock, etc., of a perishable character or of fluctuating value.⁴⁰ An application for shares in a company must, it has been held, be accepted by an allotment within a reasonable time dependent upon the prospectus and object of the company.⁴¹ Where an offer is made to another orally and he goes away without accepting it, it would seem that ordinarily the offer would be considered as having lapsed. For example, if an article is exposed for sale to-day at a certain price and the buyer does not agree a larger sum may be asked to-morrow when he returns prepared to buy.⁴² An offer to sell goods sent by mail in the usual course of business, without expressly requiring an answer by return mail, must generally be accepted by the mail leaving during business hours on the day the offer is received, although not necessarily by the next post.⁴³ An offer by telegram is notice that a prompt reply was required and an acceptance by letter would ordinarily not be in time,⁴⁴ nor even a telegram sent the day after it was received.⁴⁵

(ii) QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT. The question of reasonable time is a question of law for the court in two classes of cases, viz.: (1) Commercial transactions which happen in the same way, day after day, and present the question of reasonable time on the same data in continually recurring instances, so that by a series of decisions of the courts the reasonable time has been rendered certain; and (2) where the time taken is so clearly reasonable or unreasonable that there can be no room for doubt as to the proper answer to the question.⁴⁶ Where the answer to the question is one dependent on many different circumstances, which do not constantly recur in other cases of like character, and with respect to which no certain rule of law has theretofore been laid down or could be laid down, the question is one of fact for the jury.⁴⁷

c. By Death or Insanity. The death or insanity of either party before acceptance is communicated causes an offer to lapse. An acceptance communicated to the representatives of the offerer cannot bind them. Nor can the representatives of a deceased offeree accept the offer on behalf of his estate.⁴⁸ So a continuing guaranty is revoked by notice of the death of the guarantor,⁴⁹ and an authority to act as agent by the death of the principal.⁵⁰ Where a subscription to a church building fund is supported by the consideration of other subscriptions made in reliance thereon, and is irrevocable by the conditional subscriber at the time of his death, his death does not operate as a revocation thereof.⁵¹

d. By Change of Circumstances. Other changes of circumstances before the acceptance have been held to cause the offer to lapse; as for example, the destruction of the subject-matter of the contract;⁵² the dissolution of a partnership to whom or by whom it was made;⁵³ a change in the physical condition of one to whom an offer to insure his life has been made;⁵⁴ or bankruptcy of one of the parties which transfers all his property to trustees.⁵⁵

telegraph;⁵⁷ and in either case as soon as an offer is thus made and accepted there is a binding contract.⁵⁸ Whether or not the correspondence shows an agreement is always a question of construction.⁵⁹ If an agreement be contained in correspondence, a limitation or condition inserted in one or more of the communications need not be repeated or referred to in subsequent ones in order to preserve its force.⁶⁰ In the United States a party making an offer by telegraph is responsible for the correct transmission of his message and is bound by it in the terms in which it is delivered to the party addressed.⁶¹

b. When Offer Is Complete. Where a person uses the post to make an offer, the post-office becomes his agent to carry the offer. The offer is not made when the letter is posted but when it is received, and the offerer must suffer the consequences arising from delay or mistake on the part of the post-office.⁶²

In England it has been held that where a person makes an offer by telegram and it is wrongly transmitted to the offeree and accepted by him there is no contract, the court saying that the post-office authorities are only agents to transmit messages, in the terms in which the senders deliver them. c. Acceptance by Post or Telegraph. Where a person makes an offer and requires or authorizes the offeree, either expressly or impliedly, to send his answer by post or telegraph, and the answer is duly posted or telegraphed, the acceptance is communicated and the contract is complete from the moment the letter is mailed or the telegram sent.⁶³ The request or authorization to communicate the acceptance by mail is implied in two cases, viz.: (1) Where the post is used to make the offer, as where a person makes an offer to another by mail and says nothing as to how the answer shall be sent; and (2) where the circumstances are such that it must have been within the contemplation of the parties that according to the ordinary usages of mankind the post might be used as a means of communicating the acceptance.⁶⁴ An offer made by post and an acceptance by telegram would doubtless be held to fall under this head. But where an offer is made by advertisement it would not seem that an acceptance is communicated until the letter actually reaches the offerer.⁶⁵ The time of acceptance by post or telegraph and the lapse of an offer by delay is elsewhere considered.⁶⁶

d. Agreement Concluded When Acceptance Posted or Telegraphed. Since agreements made by means of the post or the telegraph are simply an illustration of the general rule before stated that the offerer takes the risk as to the effectiveness of communication if the acceptance is made in the manner either expressly or impliedly indicated by him, it necessarily follows that the contract is complete as soon as the letter containing the acceptance is mailed or the telegram sent, and it makes no difference whatever that through mistake of the post-office authorities or the telegraph company, or through accident in transmission, it is delayed or is lost in transit and never received by the offerer. This is now the well-settled rule in England⁶⁷ and Canada,⁶⁸ and in the United States,⁶⁹

defendants offered to sell wool to plaintiff by letter dated September 2, "Receiving your answer in course of post," but misdirected the letter, so that plaintiff did not receive it until September 5, when he posted his acceptance, but defendants had meanwhile sold the wool. It was held that the agreement was complete on plaintiff's posting the letter of acceptance, the court saying that "the defendants must be considered in law as making, during every instant of the time their letter was travelling, the same identical offer to the plaintiffs."

63. Adams v. Lindsell, 1 B. & Ald. 681, 19 Rev. Rep. 415, where it is said that if this were not so no contract could ever be completed by the post, for, if the offerers were not bound by their offer when accepted by the offerees until the answer is received, then the offerees ought not to be bound till after they have received the notification that the offerers have received their answer and assented to it, and so it might go on ad infinitum. And see the other cases cited in the notes preceding and in those following.

The secretary there handed him a written offer for his property, which he took away with him. On the next day the secretary posted a withdrawal of the offer. The letter containing the withdrawal was posted between twelve and one o'clock and did not reach Birkenhead until after five p. m. In the meantime H had, at three-fifty p. m., placed in the post-office at Birkenhead a letter accepting the offer, which did not actually reach the secretary's office until the next day. It was held that the contract was complete when the letter containing the acceptance was posted at Birkenhead.

except perhaps in Massachusetts, where it has been held that the acceptor takes the risk of his letter being lost or delayed.⁷⁰

e. Letter Must Be Properly Stamped, Addressed, and Posted. As the post-office, under its regulations, does not forward an unstamped letter, it is clear that an acceptance to bind the offeror from the time it is dropped in the post-office must be contained in an envelope properly stamped.⁷¹ And it is likewise necessary that the letter shall be properly addressed⁷² and properly deposited for transmission.⁷³ Street letter-boxes are a part of the post-office system, and a letter deposited in one of these boxes is considered as being mailed at the post-office.⁷⁴

f. Offer Requiring Actual Receipt of Acceptance. The rule that a letter of acceptance takes effect when it is mailed does not apply of course where the offer requires actual receipt of the letter or telegram of acceptance, as where it says, "Unless I receive your answer by a certain time, I will not consider myself bound."⁷⁵ Such a condition may in some cases be implied from the nature of the case and the form of the previous negotiations.⁷⁶

g. Revocation of Offer. As we have seen, an offer not under seal may be revoked at any time before acceptance, unless there is a binding agreement to hold it open, but it cannot be revoked after acceptance.⁷⁷ And revocation of an offer cannot prevent an effectual acceptance unless it is actually communicated to the offeree.⁷⁸ It follows that if an offer be sent by letter through the post, although by the regulations of the office the sender may not be able to recall his letter, yet he may by other means if possible withdraw the offer before it is accepted,⁷⁹ as by a second letter sent by the same post and delivered at the same time with the first letter,⁸⁰ or by a letter received by the offeree before he has posted his acceptance.⁸¹ But a revocation of the offer which is not actually notified to the person to whom the offer has been made, or which is brought to his knowledge after he has communicated his acceptance of the offer, is altogether inoperative; as in the case of a letter of revocation not delivered until after the offer contained in a former letter has been accepted by posting the letter of acceptance, although it may have been posted before the acceptance of the offer was mailed.⁸²

h. Post-Office Regulations as to Reclaiming Letter. In the English cases it is always assumed that the letter on being posted is beyond the control of the sender—that it becomes the property of the addressee as soon as it is put into the mail.⁸³ Within a few years the regulations of the United States post-office have been altered and the writer or sender may apply for a letter he has put in the mail, and when properly identified the postmaster must return it to him or telegraph to the office of the addressee whose postmaster must return it to the mailing postmaster, if it has not been delivered.⁸⁴ The question then will arise, whether a change in the regulations of the post-office can affect the law that the acceptance is final when the letter is dropped in the post-office. It seems that it does.⁸⁵

Mr. Justice Holmes puts it this way: "The offerer when he drops the letter containing the counter promise into the letter-box, does an overt act, which, by general understanding, renounces control over the letter, and puts it into a third hand for the benefit of the offerer, with liberty to the latter at any moment thereafter to take it." Holmes Com. L. 306.

84. United States Post-office Regulations, 487, 489.

85. In an English case decided in 1873, a letter containing bills of exchange indorsed to the person to whom it was addressed was posted at Lyons, France. Afterward, and before the bills left the office, the sender notified the post-office authorities that he desired its return. The rules of the French post-office permit a person who has posted a letter to recover it at any time before it is despatched from the office where it is posted, on complying with certain forms. It was held that the property to the bills had not passed. Mellish, L. J., said: "The question therefore arises, of which party the post office is the agent. In this country, where the sender of a letter cannot get it returned after it has been posted, if the indorsee of a bill authorizes the indorser to send the bill through the post office, the bill as soon as it is posted becomes the property of the indorsee. But according to the regulations of the French Post Office a person who posts a letter may get it back on complying with certain forms at any time before the letter has left the town where it is posted. I am inclined to think that the effect of that rule is that the post office is the agent of the sender of the letter until it leaves the town, and that the indorsement alone, and not from the fact of agreement⁸⁶ or from consideration.⁸⁷ A contract under seal is necessary at common law where the promise is without consideration, and in many jurisdictions conveyances of land and certain other contracts are required by statute to be under seal. Contracts under seal are treated under other titles.⁸⁸

B. Writing — 1. NECESSITY FOR. The only formal contract in our law is the contract under seal, all others being parol contracts, depending for their validity upon consideration, whether they be by word of mouth or in writing.⁸⁹ The only contracts which, in the absence of a statute, are required to be in writing, outside of those requiring a seal, are bills of exchange and promissory notes.⁹⁰ The necessity of writing, as evidence of agreement or as giving validity to the agreement, is, except in these cases, purely statutory. The most important statute of this class is the statute of frauds of 29 Charles II, the provisions of which have been substantially reenacted in most of the states and territories. Under these statutes many agreements which might otherwise be entered into by word of mouth have been rendered by positive statutory enactment either void or unenforceable unless embodied in a written document.⁹¹ Where statutory power is given to certain persons to make contracts this does not require that the contract shall necessarily be in writing to bind them.⁹²

2. WHERE WRITING ESSENTIAL OUTSIDE OF STATUTES. An agreement may be good by word of mouth, and yet if it is the intention of the parties that it shall not be binding until put in writing, there can be no enforceable agreement until that is done, for even a written memorandum of a contract to be subsequently drawn up and signed is not an enforceable agreement.⁹³ And the parties may contract between themselves that no oral agreement in regard to future transactions between them shall be binding on them except the agreement be made in writing.⁹⁴ It must also be remembered that there is a general rule of evidence, of far-reaching importance, that evidence of an oral agreement is not admissible to contradict or add to the terms of a written contract.⁹⁵

3. FORM OF LANGUAGE. To make an enforceable agreement in writing no particular form of words is essential. The intention of the parties is alone looked to and the use of inapt words or bad English will not affect the validity of the agreement,⁹⁶ although it may its construction.⁹⁷ Yet every writing, although signed by one or both of the parties, is not to be construed as an agreement,⁹⁸ as for example a mere schedule of prices for work and materials.⁹⁹ The same is true of an acknowledgment in the form of a due-bill.¹ And even a writing in the form of a receipt may contain words showing a contract.²

had directed and A had done extra work on the wall at B's request, there could be no recovery in the absence of a writing on the subject.

4. AGREEMENT IN SEVERAL WRITINGS. An agreement may be collected from several different writings which when connected show the parties, subject-matter, terms, and consideration,³ as in the case of contracts entered into by correspondence.⁴ A written agreement of which there are two copies, one signed by each of the parties, is binding upon both to the same extent as if there had been only one copy of the agreement, and both had signed it.⁵

5. AGREEMENT PARTLY WRITTEN AND PARTLY ORAL. An agreement may be partly in writing and partly by word of mouth.⁶ A contract may be in writing as to one party and oral as to the others, as where a person makes his offer in writing and the other party accepts orally or vice versa.⁷

C. Signing—1. NECESSITY FOR. As a general rule a written agreement cannot be said to be a completed contract until it is signed by all the parties to it.⁸ And this is especially true where the agreement expressly provides, or its manifest intent is, that it is not to be binding until signed.⁹ Yet it is competent for the duplicate, and he signs but one of the instruments and returns it, this is the contract between them.¹⁴

3. PARTIES SIGNING BOUND. As a general rule one signing a contract is bound by its terms,¹⁵ although he may not be named in it.¹⁶

4. MODE OF SIGNING. It is not necessary that the signature of a party to a contract should appear at the end thereof. If his name is written by him in any part of the contract, or at the top, or the right or left hand, with intention to sign or for the purpose of authenticating the instrument, it is sufficient to bind him.¹⁷ Manifestly, however, the mere fact that one's name appears in the body of a written document cannot, standing alone, make him a party to it, where he has not signed it.¹⁸ One may sign with initials or mark, etc.,¹⁹ and in ink or pencil, or may adopt a printed or stamped signature.²⁰

5. SIGNING BY PROCURATION OR ADOPTION. One may be bound by an agreement to which his signature is affixed by procuration, adoption, or ratification, as well as though it had been written by his own hand.²¹ Where one signs another's name for him in his presence and by his direction, it is the act of the person whose name is signed as much as though he wrote the signature himself.²² Any defect in the method of executing a written instrument evidencing a contract may, it seems, be cured by ratification.²³

D. Delivery. To the execution of a contract in writing delivery is ordinarily an essential element;²⁴ and a delivery on condition is not a complete delivery until the condition is fulfilled.²⁵ But a writing not delivered may be evidence of the actual terms of an agreement between the parties.²⁶ And to entitle one to sue on a contract made with another for his benefit it is not necessary that the contract shall have been delivered to him, but it is sufficient if it was delivered to the person with whom it was made.²⁷

E. Date. A written agreement is valid although undated.²⁸

F. Leaving Blanks in Writing. A writing is incomplete as an agreement where blanks as to essential matters are left in it,²⁹ unless they can be supplied from other parts of the writing itself.³⁰ But one signing a paper and leaving blanks in it is ordinarily presumed to give authority to the holder to fill the blanks in accordance with the general character of the instrument.³¹ complete and valid.³² But sometimes the revenue laws require written agreements or agreements of a particular kind to be stamped, and omission of the stamp in such a case may render an agreement invalid.³³

b. Instruments Requiring Stamps. Where a revenue tax is imposed on documents of a special character, to determine whether a stamp is required in any given case the form of the document is to be looked to rather than the transaction of which it is a part. Stamps are imposed not on transactions but on documents.³⁴ Under the several stamp acts requiring agreements to be stamped, a letter containing an offer which is accepted verbally does not require a stamp, as the acts do not contemplate that every document which may be given in evidence to show the existence of an agreement should be stamped, but only such agreements as would be evidence against both the contracting parties.³⁵ In the absence of express statutory provision, a receipt for property delivered, such as an express receipt, is not such an agreement within the meaning of the revenue acts as requires a stamp,³⁶ although it has been held that a receipt for money loaned which imports an obligation to repay it must be stamped as an instrument for the payment of money.³⁷ Under the various United States revenue acts the stamp duty is not imposed upon instruments made necessary in legal proceedings or where the imposition of the duty would be a tax upon the exercise by the state of its governmental functions.³⁸

c. Amount of Stamps. One revenue stamp is sufficient where a number of persons severally bind themselves in a penalty by one bond, conditioned that each

"Call" for stock.—In Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 21 S. Ct. 611, 45 L. ed. 853, it was held that a "call" for stock, which contains an absolute promise to sell the stock at any time within a designated period, although it may be a unilateral contract, is an agreement to sell, within the meaning of the War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, Schedule A, § 25, requiring a stamp tax of two cents on each hundred dollars of face value or fraction thereof.

Warrant of attorney.—In Tolman v. Treat, 106 Fed. 679, it was held that a warrant of attorney, which in fact was a retainer, by virtue of which an attorney at law was authorized to appear in the court in behalf of a client to take certain steps as attorney in litigation to which the client was a party, was not subject to a stamp tax under the War Revenue Act of June 30, 1898.

Contract evidenced by letters.—It was held in Myers v. Smith, 48 Barb. (N. A. 155, that postal cards sent out by a warehouse company, on receipt at its warehouse of goods consigned to a party, reciting: "The merchandise designated below is now at these warehouses subject to your order on payment of the freight due thereon. . . . Merchandise not removed within 10 days from date will be stored subject to tariff of charges," etc., were not warehouse receipts within Schedule A of the Warehouse Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, and were not subject to the stamp tax as such.

and every one of them shall perform the same matter;³⁹ where a debtor compounds with his creditors and each creditor signs the same deed;⁴⁰ where several mariners join in a bill of sale of their several shares of prize-money;⁴¹ where an agreement is made by several for a subscription to one common fund, although it is several as to each subscriber;⁴² where an annuity by three is sold, one being a mere surety;⁴³ where several underwriters on the same policy all agree to refer the demand of the insured on such policy;⁴⁴ where an apprentice is bound for a certain number of years, part with a certain party and the remainder with a different party, to learn different trades;⁴⁵ and where members of a mutual insurance club all execute the same power of attorney, authorizing persons therein named to sign the club policies for them.⁴⁶ Where several instruments are executed together as one transaction by and between the same parties, and constitute but one contract, it is only necessary to affix the stamps required for one contract.⁴⁷ In England it has been held sufficient to affix the amount of stamps required by the act in force at the time of the stamping, although the tax is less than at the time the instrument was executed.⁴⁸

2. WHO MAY AFFIX. It is immaterial by whom the proper stamp is affixed to an instrument,⁴⁹ unless the statute clearly provides that it shall be affixed by a particular person.⁵⁰

3. TIME OF AFFIXING. While the proper time to affix the stamp to the instrument is upon its execution, yet failure to affix a stamp at such time may be cured, under the statute, by allowing the stamp to be affixed in open court at the time the instrument is offered in evidence,⁵¹ or by a provision conferring upon the collector of internal revenue of the proper district the authority to affix the proper stamp, upon sufficient showing that the omission to stamp was the result of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any wilful design to defraud the government of the duty or to evade or delay the payment thereof.⁵²

4. EFFECT OF OMISSION. Where the revenue stamps required by statute to be affixed to an instrument are purposely omitted, with an intent to evade the duty, the instrument is void and inadmissible in evidence.⁵³ But where the omission to affix stamps is without intent to evade the provisions of the statutes, the rule seems settled that it will not render the instrument void or inadmissible in evidence.⁵⁴ An intent to defraud by the omission of a stamp from an instrument requiring a stamp will not be presumed, but must be proved like any other fraud; ⁵⁵ and the burden of proof is upon the party relying upon the omission. ⁵⁶

5. EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT STAMPING. Where an instrument from which the stamp has been omitted at the time of its execution is afterward stamped as prescribed by statute, either by the proper collector or in the presence of the court, it is thereby rendered valid from the date of its execution. ⁵⁷

6. PRESUMPTION AS TO PROPER STAMPING. In the absence of other evidence it will be presumed that instruments recorded at a time when it was the duty of the recorder to refuse to record instruments not properly stamped were so stamped. ⁵⁸ This presumption likewise obtains, in the absence of proof to the contrary, in an action upon a lost instrument. ⁵⁹

Intervening rights.—It was held in McBride v. Doty, 23 Iowa 122, that as a record of an instrument insufficiently stamped does not import constructive notice to third parties under the Revenue Act, the subsequent attaching of an additional stamp by the revenue collector does not cure the defect so as to interfere with intervening rights.

7. IMPROPER CANCELLATION OR FAILURE TO CANCEL. The rule seems to be well established that under the various internal revenue acts requiring stamps to be affixed to certain instruments courts are not prevented from receiving in evidence instruments bearing the requisite value in stamps, merely because they do not appear to have been duly canceled.⁶⁰

8. APPLICABILITY OF FEDERAL STATUTE IN STATE COURTS. It has often been held that United States statutes requiring revenue stamps upon certain instruments, and providing that when not stamped they shall not be admissible in evidence in any court, are applicable only to federal courts. Some of the courts place their decisions upon the ground that congress has not the constitutional authority to prescribe rules of evidence for state courts,⁶¹ while other decisions have been placed upon the ground that congress did not intend that the various revenue acts should apply to state courts.⁶²

Constitutional power.—It was held in Moore v. Moore, 47 N. Y. 467, 7 Am. Rep. 466, that it is not within the constitutional power of congress to declare that a contract of conveyance between citizens of a state affecting real estate is void for the reason that a revenue stamp has been omitted. And in Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240, 243, 6 Am. Rep. 617, the court said: "Congress has no constitutional authority to legislate concerning the rules of evidence administered in the Courts of this State, nor to affix conditions or limitations upon which those rules are to be applied and enforced; nor can it rightfully convert these Courts into tax gatherers for the benefit of the Federal Government, nor charge them with the duty of inquiring whether or not the revenue laws of the United States have been observed, or of investigating into the motives of parties in omitting to affix revenue stamps to the contracts they may have made."

Recording unstamped instruments.—Acts of congress relating to the recording of unstamped instruments have been held to apply only to such instruments as are required by federal law to be recorded and to federal officers. Moore v. Quirk, 105 Mass. 49, 7 Am. Rep. 499; People v. Fromme, 35 N. Y. App.

9. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. The better doctrine seems to be that where an unstamped instrument is declared to be void by the lex loci contractus it will be void everywhere,⁶³ unless the foreign statute simply renders such instrument, when unstamped, inadmissible in evidence, when the statute will have no extra-territorial effect.⁶⁴ In some jurisdictions, however, the rule is laid down that domestic courts will not take notice of the revenue laws of foreign countries, and therefore that a contract will be enforced in such forum, although invalid for want of proper stamps in the country where it was entered into.⁶⁵

IV. CONSIDERATION.

A. Definition. Various definitions of consideration are to be found in the text-books and judicial opinions. A sufficient one is: A benefit to the party promising or a loss or detriment to the party to whom the promise is made.⁶⁶

that although it is undoubtedly true that every man is by the law of nature bound to fulfil his engagements, it is equally true that the law supplies no means nor affords any remedy to compel the performance of an agreement made without sufficient consideration. Such an agreement is nudum pactum ex quo non oritur actio.⁶⁸

2. CONTRACTS IN WRITING. Lord Mansfield in an early case ruled that a promise if in writing was binding without consideration, saying that consideration was simply necessary for the sake of supplying evidence of the promisor's intention to bind himself, and that where this was supplied by other forms, as by writing, it was not required.⁶⁹ But he was overruled by the house of lords,⁷⁰ and it is now well settled that except as hereafter shown, for all promises not under seal, whether oral or in writing, a consideration is necessary.⁷¹

3. CONTRACTS UNDER SEAL. If the parties use the solemnities of a deed in which to record their agreement, a consideration is not necessary. It is sometimes said that a seal imports a consideration or that a consideration will be presumed in case of a contract under seal; but the truth is that at common law a seal dispenses with the necessity for a consideration.⁷² This has been changed in some jurisdictions by statute.⁷³

4. GRATUITOUS BAILMENT. The promise of a gratuitous service, although not enforceable as a promise, involves a liability to use ordinary care and skill in performance.⁷⁴

5. STATUTORY OBLIGATIONS. A statutory obligation on a bond or other obligation made valid and authorized by positive law needs no consideration to support it.⁷⁵

C. Presumption of Consideration — 1. NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. A negotiable instrument has a presumption of consideration which, however, may be rebutted as between the parties.⁷⁶

2. WRITTEN CONTRACTS GENERALLY. By statute in some of the states this presumption of consideration has been extended to all written instruments.⁷⁷

D. What Constitutes a Consideration — 1. IN GENERAL. It may be laid down as a general rule, in accordance with the definition given above,⁷⁸ that there is a sufficient consideration for a promise if there is any benefit to the promisor or any loss or detriment to the promisee.⁷⁹ It is not necessary that a benefit should doing anything which he has a right to do, whether there is any actual loss or detriment to him or actual benefit to the promisor or not.⁸⁴

2. ILLUSTRATIONS OF SUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION. Aside from the cases referred to in the following sections, the following have been held to constitute a sufficient consideration to uphold a promise, viz.: The confidence induced by undertaking a service for another;⁸⁵ the substitution of a sixty days' note in place of cash;⁸⁶ giving permission to weigh property;⁸⁷ making a payment on a promissory note before it is legally demandable;⁸⁸ a contract between two indorsers of a note that they will divide the loss between them;⁸⁹ the desire of a party to have a contract discharged, and mutual promises to deliver up obligations held by each;⁹⁰ becoming surety in an executor's bond;⁹¹ indorsement of a promissory note;⁹² service to be rendered by a promisee in securing a loan or gift for the promisor;⁹³ payment of interest in advance;⁹⁴ giving permission to a party to assume and manage a defense in suit;⁹⁵ sale of an equitable title to land;⁹⁶ transfer of or promise to transfer property;⁹⁷ promise to deliver or actual delivery of property to which the party has a right of possession;⁹⁸ a conveyance of land to another upon the latter's promise to sell it, and pay over the price received above a certain sum;⁹⁹ the delivery and acceptance of goods;¹ the benefit to a bank from the use of money collected on a note;² an agreement to settle and arrange matters to pre-debt;²⁰ loan or advancement of money or property;²¹ giving or promising an exclusive right or privilege on the promisee's property or business;²² promise to indemnify another against a prospective loss or damage;²³ purchase of stock or other property;²⁴ purchase of a stock in trade or of a professional practice;²⁵ payment of a void judgment;²⁶ and loan of credit.²⁷ Money is of course a valuable consideration.²⁸ And so are stock or bonds of a public or private corporation.²⁹

3. NEED NOT BE MONEY OR MONEY VALUE. As a valid consideration may be the doing or promising to do something not illegal, at the request of the promisor, which the promisee is not already under a legal obligation to do, or forbearing to do something which he has a legal right to do, it is clear that a consideration need not be a thing of pecuniary value or even reducible to a money value.³⁰ A promise for example to pay another a certain sum of money if he will abstain from the use of liquor and tobacco for a certain time is binding in favor of the promisee, on the ground that a man has a legal right to use liquor and tobacco.³¹

And so it has been held of a promise to pay to a divorced wife a stated annuity if she will conduct herself with sobriety and in a respectable, orderly, and virtuous manner, as she is under no obligation to the husband to remain sober or virtuous.³² Other acts, forbearances, or promises which have been held a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay money or do other acts are: the use of a patent medicine for a disease;³³ traveling for pleasure and benefit at the request of the promisor;³⁴ attending or promising to attend the promisor's funeral;³⁵ naming or giving another the right to name a child;³⁶ changing a child's name;³⁷ appointment of a person as guardian;³⁸ giving information of any kind to another;³⁹ or the surrender by a mother of her illegitimate child.⁴⁰

4. BENEFIT TO A THIRD PERSON. A benefit to a third person is a sufficient consideration for a promise.⁴¹

5. WHAT IS NOT A CONSIDERATION — a. In General. On the other hand there is no consideration for a promise where no benefit is conferred upon the promisor nor detriment suffered by the promisee, and the promisor neither undertakes to do anything which he is not bound to do nor forbears to do anything which he has a right to do.⁴² It makes no difference that one to whom a naked promise

e. Promise to Pay Debt of Third Person. A promise to pay the debt of another is nudum pactum and void for want of consideration,⁶⁹ unless there be some new benefit to the obligor or some detriment to the obligee, as a promise of forbearance or the like.⁷⁰

6. GOOD AND VALUABLE CONSIDERATION DISTINGUISHED. A good consideration is such as that of blood, or of natural love and affection, when a man grants an estate to a near relation (generally parent or child, or husband or wife) being founded on motives of generosity, prudence, and natural duty; a valuable consideration is the benefit or detriment which we have just defined. Courts and text-writers are prone to use the word "good" when meaning "valuable," for the only consideration which the law recognizes as sufficient to support a contract is the valuable one. A promise founded on a good consideration is a gratuitous one and unenforceable.⁷¹ And even deeds made upon good consideration only are considered as voluntary. Although they may be valid at law between the parties, they are not aided in equity, and are liable to be held void as against creditors and purchasers for value.⁷³

7. MOTIVE AND CONSIDERATION DISTINGUISHED. Motive and consideration must be distinguished, for they are not the same thing. The fact that there is a motive for a promise does not supply the element of consideration.⁷³

8. MARRIAGE AND PROMISE TO MARRY. Marriage is considered a valuable consideration⁷⁴ between the parties to the marriage and will support a contract made in consideration of it, as a contract of mutual promises to marry.⁷⁵ And marriage is a sufficient consideration to support a promise by a third party to the husband or wife,⁷⁶ as a promise to convey land in consideration of the promisee's marrying.⁷⁷ So marriage is a sufficient consideration to support a marriage settlement.⁷⁸ The promise of an infant to marry is a good consideration for a cor-

"The distinction between good and valuable consideration, or family affection as opposed to money value, is only to be found in the history of the law of real property." Anson Contr. 79; Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 393, 8 Jur. N. S. 332, 30 L. J. Q. B. 265, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 468, 9 Wkly. Rep. 781, 101 E. C. L. 393.

Cases other than parent and child or husband and wife.—Collateral consanguinity is not a consideration upon which equity will enforce a covenant or agreement. Hayes v. Kershow, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 258. Nor is the relationship of brother and sister. Grigsby v. Grigsby, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 131.

Relationship by marriage.—Mere affinity by marriage is not sufficient to support an executory contract (Schnell v. Nell, 17 Ind. 29, 79 Am. Dec. 453; Corwin v. Corwin, 6 N. Y. 342, 57 Am. Dec. 453 [reversing 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 219]); as in the case of uncle and nephew or niece (Mark v. Clark, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 44; Buford v. McKee, 1 Dana (Ky.) 107), or brother and sister-in-law (Kirksey v. Kirksey, 8 Ala. 131; Cotton v. Graham, 84 Ky. 672, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 658, 2 S. W. 647).

73. "Motive has most often figured as consideration in the form of a moral obligation to repay benefits received in the past. It is clear that the desire to repay or reward a benefactor is indistinguishable, for our purposes, from a desire on the part of an executor to carry out the wishes of a deceased friend or a desire on the part of a father to pay the debts of his son. The mere satisfaction of such a desire, unaccompanied by any present or future benefit accruing to the promisor or any detriment to the promisee, cannot be regarded as of any value in the eye of the law." responding promise.⁷⁹ But mere expectation on the part of the promisee that the promisor would marry her is not a sufficient consideration for a promise.⁸⁰

9. EXECUTED AND EXECUTORY CONSIDERATION—a. In General. The consideration for a promise may be executed or executory. An executed consideration is some act performed or some value given at the time of making the promise and in return for the promise then made.⁸¹ An agreement upon an executed consideration arises where one of the parties has in the act which amounts to an offer or an acceptance, as the case may be, done all that he is bound to do under the agreement, leaving an outstanding liability on the other side only. The two forms of agreement growing out of this kind of consideration are: (1) the acceptance of an executed consideration, and (2) consideration executed upon request. In either case there is no contract until the consideration is executed, and so long as the consideration remains executory it is voluntary and may be withheld, differing in this respect from contracts with executory considerations or mutual promises, in which the contract is complete upon the mere exchange of promises, and the consideration in either case, although executory, is obligatory.⁸² An executory consideration is a promise to do or to give something, or to forbear from doing something, in return for some other promise or thing done.⁸³

b. Acceptance of Executed Consideration. In the case of acceptance of an executed consideration, the agreement is in the form of an offer of an executed consideration followed by its acceptance. This is the offer of an act for a promise and arises when a man offers his labor or goods under such circumstances that he obviously expects to be paid for them, and the contract arises when the labor or goods are accepted, the acceptor becoming bound to pay a reasonable price for them,⁸⁴ provided as we have seen the person to whom the offer is made has an opportunity of accepting or rejecting the thing offered.⁸⁵

c. Consideration Executed Upon Request. In the case of consideration executed upon request, the agreement is in the form of a request to perform the consideration followed by the performing of the consideration according to the request.⁸⁶ An executed consideration will not support a promise, express or implied, unless the consideration was moved by a previous request,⁸⁷ but this request may be implied from the circumstances of the case.⁸⁸ This is the offer of a promise for an act already discussed,⁸⁹ and is illustrated by the case of an advertisement of a reward for services, which makes a binding promise to give the reward when the service is rendered,⁹⁰ in cases in which one requests another to deliver or render services or goods, and the latter does so,⁹¹ and in many other cases.⁹² Where there is no request, either express or implied, there is no contract

88. Thus where a person is employed by another to deal with property for a certain purpose, and in the course of his employment he is compelled to pay duties to the government, he may recover the amount from the other as on an implied request to pay them, and whether the request be direct, as where the party is expressly desired by the defendant to pay, or indirect, as when he is placed by him under a liability to pay and does pay, makes no difference. *Seymour v. And if one party promise another to pay him a sum of money if he will do a particular act and the latter does the act before the revocation of the promise the promise becomes binding, although the promisee does not at the time engage to do the act, the doing the act being a good consideration for the previous promise and the promise amounting to a request to do the act. *Barnes v. Money paid upon request.—If one request another to pay money for him, in a manner importing an undertaking to repay it, the amount when paid becomes a debt—the request to pay and the payment according to the request forming a contract to pay the amount, which is technically described in law as a debt "for money paid by the plaintiff for the defendant at his request." Leake Contr. 55; *Allen v. Y.) 405); a promise by one not to remove property seized by him on execution in consideration of the promise by the other to keep it safely and have it forthcoming at a certain time (Ames v. Taylor, 49 Me. 381); an agreement between two indorsers of a note that they will divide the loss between them (Phillips v. Preston, 5 How. (U. S.) 278, 12 L. ed. 152); a subscription for a book in course of publication (Kinder v. Brink, 82 Ill. 376; Western Historical Co. v. Schmidt, 56 Wis. 681, 14 N. W. 822); and mutual promises to marry (see supra, IV, 8).

and there is no proof of additional or different dealings between the parties one will be held to have been executed in consideration of the other.⁹⁷ But a written contract between several parties, in which the various covenants form mutually the several considerations, is invalid unless executed by all the parties.⁹⁸

b. Promises Must Be Concurrent. The promises must be concurrent, that is, they must become obligatory at the same time; otherwise each is a nudum pactum at the time it is made and neither will support the other.⁹⁹

c. Promise Must Impose Legal Liability. A promise is a good consideration for a promise, provided always that it imposes some legal liability on the person making it. If it imposes none then it cannot be a consideration. For example at common law a married woman's promise, being void, would not constitute a legal consideration.¹ It seems, however, that the liability need not be perfect. If the promise is merely voidable, as for instance an infant's promise, it is a sufficient consideration.² The same is true of a promise which is valid but unenforceable, as for instance an oral promise requiring written proof under the statute of frauds.³ In other words mutuality of agreement may exist and mutuality of evidence or of remedy be absent.⁴

d. Promise Must Be Certain. A promise may be too vague and uncertain to amount to a consideration for the promise made by the other party.⁵ Illustrations of such promises have been given in a former section.⁶

In the leading case of White v. Bluett, 2 C. L. R. 301, 23 L. J. Exch. 36, 37, 2 Wkly. Rep. 75, in an action on a note given by a son to his father the son pleaded a promise made by his father to discharge him from liability on the note in consideration of his ceasing to make certain complaints, which he had been in the habit of making, to the effect that he had not enjoyed as many advantages as the

e. Promise Must Be Legal. The consideration must not be illegal, either because it is in violation of a statute, or because it is immoral or contrary to public policy.⁷

f. Performance Must Be Possible—(i) IN GENERAL. If the consideration is obviously and on the face of the contract impossible, it is no consideration and will not support an agreement. If the impossibility is not obvious it is not void as a consideration, although it may avoid the contract on the ground of mistake,⁸ or may be in certain cases a valid ground of discharge.⁹ Impossibility is either (1) physical or (2) legal.

(ii) PHYSICAL IMPOSSIBILITY. Physical impossibility means here practical impossibility according to the state of knowledge of the day,¹⁰ as for example a promise to go from New York to London in one day or to discover treasure by magic or to go round the world in a week.¹¹ If the promise be within the range of possibility, however absurd or impossible the idea of its execution may be, it will be upheld; as where one covenants that it shall rain to-morrow or that the pope shall be at Westminster on a certain day. To bring the case within the rule of impossibility it must appear that the thing to be done cannot by any means be accomplished; for if it is only improbable or out of the power of the obligor it is not in law deemed impossible.¹²

(iii) LEGAL IMPOSSIBILITY. A prima facie legal impossibility, that is, an impossibility in law apparent when the agreement is made, is illustrated by the promise in an old case by one person, without authority from another, to discharge a debt due the latter, because no one without authority from the creditor could release a debt due to him.¹³ So of an undertaking "that plaintiff's tract of land shall sell for a certain sum by a given day," for no man can force the sale of another's property by a given day or by any day as of his own act;¹⁴ of a promise other children. The court held that the son's promise was no more than a promise "not to bore his father" and was too vague to constitute a consideration for the father's promise. "A man," said the court, "might complain that another person used the public highway more than he ought to do, and that other might say, 'do not complain, and I will give you five pounds. It is ridiculous to suppose that such promises could be binding.'" The contrary seems to have been held in Sharon v. Sharon, 68 Cal. 29, 8 Pac. 614 [criticized in 22 Centr. L. J. 61]. See also Little v. McCarter, 89 N. C. 233, where it was held that a promise to pay a part of the price of land to be purchased by another, made for the purpose of ridding the promisor of a disagreeable neighbor residing on the land, and not to acquire any interest in the land, was supported by a sufficient consideration.

Rep. 925, where the lessee of land had covenanted to take from it not less than one thousand or more than two thousand tons of potter's clay in each year and to pay the lessee an agreed royalty upon it, Brett, J., while holding the lessee discharged by impossibility of performance because there was not that amount of clay in the land, said: "I think it is not competent to a defendant to say that there is no binding contract, merely because he has engaged to do something which is physically-impossible. I think it will be found in all the cases where that has been said, that the thing stipulated for was, according to the state of knowledge of the day, so absurd that the parties could not be supposed to have so contracted. But here both parties might well have supposed that there was clay under the land."

to transfer a license, when the law did not allow such transfers;¹⁵ of a promise to marry by one already married and known to be so by the promisee;¹⁶ or of a promise to pay usurious interest where such a promise is void;¹⁷ and other like cases.¹⁸

g. Promise May Be Conditional. The fact that the promise given for a promise is dependent upon a condition does not affect its validity as consideration.¹⁹

h. Mutuality—(1) IN GENERAL. There are many cases in which, although the offer is definite enough, yet the acceptor by merely accepting has really himself promised nothing in return, has not made himself liable for anything, so that, although one is bound the other is not, and the engagement lacks what is called mutuality. In such a case there is not an enforceable agreement.²⁰ The most

It was held that as the insolvent corporation had no power to bind the new corporation, there was no consideration, and the contract was revocable at any time before actual performance. It was held not enforceable, the court saying: "It is signed by both parties in presence of attesting witnesses; and is expressed in clear and precise terms. But there is one characteristic necessary to give it validity as a binding contract, in which it is entirely deficient. It wants mutuality. It imposes no obligation on Dorsey whatever. He is not bound either to render services or pay money as a consideration for one half the land. Packwood could not support a suit upon it to compel Dorsey to do anything." tain time and the other accepts the offer. Here there is no consideration for the promise or offer, for the promisee has not bound himself to anything and has incurred no legal liability at all.²¹ The correct view of the case is that there is no agreement binding on the promisor, but simply an offer on his part which may be accepted by giving an order until such time as it is actually withdrawn²² or expires by limitation of time.²³ Where, however, the acceptance does really impose any obligation on the acceptor, then a consideration is present and a binding contract results; and this is so wherever the acceptor's freedom of action is in any way limited. It is not limited at all where he simply assents to the seller's offer to sell him all the goods he may order or "desire" during a certain time, for he has not promised to order any nor is he bound to do so; but it is limited where the offer is to supply him with all the goods of a particular kind which he may "require" or which he may need during a certain time, for here, although it may be that he will neither need nor require any, yet if he does he has bound himself to buy them of the proposer, and has hence parted with his right to buy them from whom he pleases.²⁴ A promise lacking mutuality

22. In a leading English case the defendant sent to the plaintiff, a railroad company, a tender to supply iron for a certain period at certain fixed prices "in such quantities as the company's store-keeper might order from time to time." The plaintiff accepted the tender, and under it several orders were given by the company which were duly filled by the defendant; but finally the plaintiff gave an order which the defendant refused to fill. Thereupon the plaintiff sued for the breach. It was held that the action would lie. The consideration for the defendant's offer, the court said, was not the acceptance of the defendant's tender, as that did not bind the plaintiff to anything. It was the actual sending of the order for a definite quantity of iron while the tender or offer was in force. Accepting the tender imposed no obligation on the plaintiff, but ordering a definite quantity of iron did, for it bound the company to take and pay for what it had ordered. *Great Northern R. Co. v. (II) SUBSCRIPTIONS — (A) Mutual Promises. The case of promises to or subscriptions to carry out some public or charitable object or common enterprise raises an interesting question as to consideration, and three views on the subject obtain in the courts. It is held in some cases that the promises of the subscribers mutually support each other, and being for the benefit of a common beneficiary where a corporation agreed to employ the plaintiff so long as it was engaged in business at a certain place.

Lansing Wheel Co., 94 Mich. 272, 54 N. W. 39, 34 Am. St. Rep. 341, where it was held that the offer of a manufacturer to deliver to plaintiff all the goods of a specified class, at specified prices, that plaintiff may need during the season is a mere offer by the manufacturer to furnish the goods, which he has a right to withdraw at any time before it is acted on, even though accepted by plaintiff; but after he has filled an order at the prices specified, and has thus had the benefit of a sale, the entire contract becomes valid and binding, and he cannot thereafter decline to fill further orders. This decision is clearly wrong on both points. On the first, because we have seen that the promise to buy all the wheels he needed limited the plaintiff's freedom of choice and was a good consideration for the promise; on the second, because if it was simply an offer the order for a certain quantity of the goods was a contract to deliver the quantity ordered and not all that the plaintiff might order in the future.

Minnesota.—McMullan v. Dickinson Co., 63 Minn. 405, 65 N. W. 661, 663; Minneapolis Mill Co. v. Goodnow, 40 Minn. 497, 42 N. W. 356, 4 L. R. A. 202. Compare Bailey v. Austrian, 19 Minn. 535 [followed in Tarbox v. Gotzian, 20 Minn. 139], where the court reasoned that, as the acceptor might go out of business when he pleased, there was no engagement on his part to "want" any of the goods offered, a plainly erroneous view, for the acceptor did at least part with his right to buy goods of persons other than the offerer. This is enough; and it is not necessary to require in addition to this a warranty that he will remain in the business for any length of time. In a subsequent case the Minnesota court seems to have practically overruled Bailey v. Austrian, 19 Minn. 535. See Ames-Brooks Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 83 Minn. 346, 350, 86 N. W. 344, where it is said: "Plaintiff was engaged in an established business, of which the insurance of its cargoes was a part; and the plaintiff, as the evidence tends to show, absolutely promised the defendants that they should have such insurance for the year 1899 on all of its cargoes to Buffalo and lower lake ports, and they in turn promised to write the insurance upon the terms of the 1898 contract. This presupposes the continuance of the plaintiff in the business for the year 1899, and included by necessary intentment a promise on its part not to give such insurance to any other party. This was a sufficient consideration for the defendants' promise."

Compare Drake v. Vorse, 52 Iowa 417, 3 N. W. 465.

Distinction where need may be approximately determined and where not.—In Crane v. Crane, 105 Fed. 869, the federal court distinguishes between a contract to furnish another with such supplies as may be needed during a specified period of time for some certain business or manufacture, or with such commodities as the purchaser has already contracted to furnish to others, the quantity in such cases being capable of at least approximate estimation when the contract is made, and an agreement by a wholesale dealer to supply a retailer during a certain time, at stated prices, with so much of a commodity as the purchaser may require for his trade. The former in the opinion of the court is good; but the latter is not, for the reason that it leaves it practically optional with the purchaser to increase or diminish his orders with the rise or fall of prices, as may be most to his advantage and the corresponding disadvantage of the seller. Hence in the opinion of the court there is no mutuality.

25. Willetts v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 45 N. Y. 45, 6 Am. Rep. 31.

the latter may sue on the promise as one made for his special benefit.²⁶ This view would seem correct in those states where a stranger to the consideration is permitted to enforce the promise;²⁷ but it cannot obtain where there is but a single subscriber or donor, as the case may be, for there is no difference in respect to the necessity for a consideration to support a promise made in behalf of a charitable institution and a promise for any other purpose. All simple contracts must be based upon a sufficient legal consideration.²⁸

(b) Implied Agreement to Perform. A second view is that the person to whom the subscription is made impliedly promises to appropriate the funds subscribed in conformity with the terms and effects of the subscription, and that this implied promise is a sufficient consideration in the absence of any other to support the promise of the subscriber.²⁹ But this view is open to the criticism, in the case of a subscription to a public or charitable purpose, that the implied promise by the trustees would be nothing more than a promise on their part to do their duty, and doing or promising to do what one is already legally bound to do is not a

(c) Actual Performance. A third and the prevailing view is that a subscription like any other promise or offer requires a consideration to support it either of profit to the party promising or of loss to the other party, and that it is only where some obligation is incurred or labor or money is expended on the faith of it that the subscriber is bound, up to which time the subscription may be revoked by the subscriber and is revoked by his death or insanity; but the subscription becomes binding as soon as a consideration is furnished by incurring an obligation or expending labor or money on the faith of it.³¹ So where the subscription is

In a leading Massachusetts case the court said: "In every case, in which this court has sustained an action upon a promise of this description, the promisee's acceptance of the defendant's promise was shown, either by express vote or contract, assuming a liability or obligation, legal or equitable, or else by some unequivocal act, such as advancing or expending money, or erecting a building in accordance with the terms of the contract, and upon the faith of the defendant's promise." The court goes on to say that the suggestion in several earlier cases in the same state (Watkins v. Eames, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 537; Ives v. Sterling, 6 Mete. (Mass.) 310; Pembroke Second Precinct Church v. Stetson, on condition that a certain amount shall be obtained, on the obtaining the amount the subscription is recoverable.³²

(III) MUTUALITY MAY BE IMPLIED. To show mutuality, the obligation may be implied as well as express. Although on its face and by its express terms the contract is obligatory on one party only, yet if the intention of the parties and the consideration upon which the obligation is assumed is that there shall be a correlative obligation on the other side the law will imply it.³³

(IV) EXECUTED CONTRACTS. Want of mutuality is no defense in the case of an executed contract.³⁴

(V) MUTUALITY SUBSEQUENTLY PRESENT. Although there is a lack of mutuality in the beginning, this may be cured by the other party subsequently binding himself also by promise or act. Thus if A promise B to pay him a sum of money if he will do a particular act or make a particular promise and B does the act the promise thereupon becomes binding, although B at the time of the promise does not engage to do the act or make the promise. In the intermediate time the obligation of the promise is suspended, for until the performance of the condition of the promise there is no consideration, and the promise is nudum pactum; but on the performance of the condition by the promisee it is clothed with a valid consideration which relates back to the promise, and it then becomes

5 Pick. (Mass.) 506), that "it is a sufficient consideration, that others were led to subscribe by the very subscription of the defendant" was in each case mere obiter dictum and inconsistent with elementary principles. "Similar promises of third persons to the plaintiff," it was said, "may be a consideration for agreements between those persons and the defendant; but as they confer no benefit upon the defendant, and impose no charge or obligation upon the plaintiff, they constitute no legal consideration for the defendant's promise to him." *Cottage St. M. Co., 5 N. Y. App. Div. 212, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 131; Hadden v. Dimick, 31 How. Pr. 196 (holding that an agreement that a person should for a certain number of years consign to others all the blankets of his manufacture to be sold by them on commission was not invalid for want of mutuality).

United States.—Butler v. Thomson, 92 U. S. 412, 23 L. ed. 684; Mississippi River Logging Co. v. Robson, 69 Fed. 773, 16 C. C. A. 400 (holding that an agreement providing that one party should take control of logs delivered to it by the other and prepare them for transportation was not void for absence of an express agreement by the latter party to furnish logs).

Contract for carriage of goods.—Where a common carrier contracts to carry produce for a certain price, which the other party agrees to pay, the contract is not void for want of an express agreement by the other party to furnish the produce for carriage. Such an obligation is implied. Bangor Furnace Co. v. Magill, 108 Ill. 656; Minneapolis Mill Co. v. Goodnow, 40 Minn. 497, 42 N. W. 356, 4 L. R. A. 202; Stilwell v. Ocean Steamship Co., 5 N. Y. App. Div. 212, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 131; McCartney v. Glassford, 1 Wash. 579, 20 Pac. 423.

34. Varney v. Bradford, 86 Me. 510, 30 Atl. 115; Grove v. Hodges, 55 Pa. St. 504; Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Lyon, 71 Fed. 374.

Illustration.—Thus if A promise to pay B a sum of money to do a particular act and B does the act A is liable, although B did not at the time of the promise engage to do the act; for upon the performance of the condition by the promisee the contract is clothed with a valid consideration which relates back and the promise at once becomes obligatory. Des Moines Valley R. Co. v. Graff, 27 Iowa 99, 1 Am. Rep. 256. See supra, II, C, 2, b, (IV); II, C, 3, c, (III); II, C, 5, a, (III).

obligatory.³⁵ Therefore a contract to pay a certain sum upon the performance of certain acts by another becomes a binding obligation upon the promisor on the performance of said acts before the revocation of the contract, although it express no consideration past or present and contain no promises that such acts shall be performed.³⁶

(VI) OPTIONS FOUNDED ON CONSIDERATION. When there is an agreement founded on a consideration, it is not invalid for want of mutuality because one party has an option while the other has not, or in other words because it is obligatory on one and optional with the other.³⁷ Thus a person for a sufficient consideration may bind himself to buy at a fixed price all the wheat that another may bring to his warehouse during a certain time.³⁸ So want of mutuality cannot be set up as a defense by the party who has received the benefit, simply because it was left optional with the other party as to whether he would enforce his right.³⁹ Such contracts, however, although good at law are not favored by and will not always be enforced in a court of equity.⁴⁰

35. Alabama.—Sheffield Furnace Co. v. Hull Coal, etc., Co., 101 Ala. 446, 14 So. 672. In this case an agreement for the sale and shipment of coke was expressly conditioned on the ability of the seller to induce operators to build ovens and make the coke, and provided for notice by the seller to the buyer at specified times as to how much of the entire quantity of coke could be supplied during certain periods. It was held that the seller was bound thereby as soon as he induced operators to build ovens and make the coke.

Massachusetts.—Goward v. Waters, 98 Mass. 596.

Missouri.—Jones v. Durgin, 16 Mo. App. 370, holding that a written agreement signed only by B, by which he agreed to pay A for the insertion of his advertisement in a book to be published by him one cent for each printed page of such advertisement in every volume which might be disposed of, was not enforceable by A, for lack of mutuality, save to the extent that it had been executed by the insertion of the advertisement before B countermanded it.

Indiana.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. App. 109, 32 N. E. 303, 51 Am. St. Rep. 289, holding that an agreement whereby one, in consideration of the release of a claim of damages against him, employs another at certain wages so long as the works of the first are kept running or until the other shall see fit to quit is not void for lack of mutuality.

Minnesota.—Staples v. O'Neal, 64 Minn. 27, 65 N. W. 1083, holding that where a person by one entire contract purchased of another a certain quantity of logs at an agreed price and also another quantity at a certain price, but reserved the right to refuse to accept the latter unless they arrived at the boom at a certain time, the option was not void for lack of mutuality.

Illustration.—Thus in a Pennsylvania case an agreement whereby one agreed to play base-ball for a club for a period of time which at the option of the club might equal the term of the player's life and which reserved to the club the right to discharge the player on ten days' notice, without cause, was held not enforceable by an injunction against its violation by the player. American Assoc.

Willingness to perform.—In equity a party not bound by the agreement cannot call for performance by expressing his willingness to perform. "His right to the aid of the Court does not depend upon his subsequent offer to perform the contract on his part, when events may have rendered it advantageous to do so, but upon its originally obligatory character." Arkansas.—Sykes v. Lafferry, 27 Ark. 407. Connecticut.—Waters v. White, (1902) 52 Atl. 401, where in an action on a note signed by a husband and wife, the wife defended on the ground of want of consideration for her promise, and showed that she signed it after delivery to the payee under pressure of statements of the payee that he would make trouble for her husband if she did not sign, because he had obtained the loan by false representations. It was held that findings that the payee, after obtaining the wife's signature, in fact forbore to exercise his right to rescind the contract with the husband, and to enforce an immediate return of the money, and waited till the maturity of the note, were inconsistent with any other supposition than that the payee agreed to so forbear, which was a good consideration for the wife's promise.

Iowa.—Marshalltown Stone Co. v. Des Moines Brick Mfg. Co., 114 Iowa 574, 87 N. W. 496, holding that an agreement between a party about to enter into a contract to furnish certain paving materials to a city, for use on a certain street, and another, whereby the latter is to pay the former a certain amount per cubic yard for material used in such street, on condition that the former will not enter into such contract nor sell any such material in that city for a certain period, is not void for want of consideration, since the former's forbearance is sufficient.

Kentucky.—Talbot v. Stemmons, 89 Ky. 222, 12 S. W. 297, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 451, 25 Am. St. Rep. 531, 5 L. R. A. 856.

Massachusetts.—Gunther v. Gunther, 181 Mass. 217, 63 N. E. 402, holding that the voluntary surrender by a widow of the watch, clothes, and all other personal property belonging to her husband's estate was a valid consideration for a promise by the recipient, even though the estate was insolvent, since the probate court could have allowed such property to her free of the claims of creditors.

Michigan.—Calkins v. Chandler, 36 Mich. 320, 24 Am. Rep. 593. And see Union Trust Co. v. Zynda, (Mich. 1901) 88 N. W. 407, holding that where a guardian converts the property of his wards, and is removed, and is ordered forthwith to pay the sum so converted, an extension of the time to make such payment is a sufficient consideration to support a bond given to secure such sum.

Nebraska.—Racek v. North Bend First Nat. Bank, 62 Nebr. 669, 87 N. W. 542, holding that the release of a homestead right by a husband is a sufficient consideration to support a contract made between husband and wife for an equal division of the money derived from a sale of the family homestead.

New Hampshire.—Farmer v. Stewart, 2 N. H. 97.

New Jersey.—Lodge v. Hulings, 63 N. J. Eq. 159, 61 Atl. 1015, holding that an agreement between a holder of notes and the heirs of the deceased maker, grandsons of the former, that the heirs will pay interest on the principal during the life of the holder in consideration of the holder surrendering her claim to the principal and delivering the notes to the heirs to be destroyed, is founded on both a valuable and a good consideration, and is binding on the holder's administrator when fully executed by the delivery and destruction of the notes.

lease;⁶⁴ resignation of a corporate office;⁶⁵ release of an option to purchase,⁶⁶ of a power of attorney,⁶⁷ or of a right to sue for damages to person or property;⁶⁸ forbearance to prefer creditors in an assignment;⁶⁹ refraining from the use of liquor or tobacco.⁷⁰

c. Forbearance to Sue—(i) IN GENERAL. Refraining from bringing a suit may furnish a consideration. The actual forbearance or the promise to forbear to prosecute a claim upon which one has a right to sue is universally held to be a sufficient consideration.⁷¹ Thus the following have been held sufficient: Extension of time for the payment of a debt or the performance of an agreement.⁷²

promise by sureties on a guardian's bond not to institute legal proceedings to procure their discharge.⁸⁵ The cause of action need not exist at the time, but it is sufficient that it may come into existence.⁸⁶

(II) DIFFERENT VIEWS AS TO EXISTENCE OF RIGHT TO SUE—(A) View That Right Must Be Perfect. There is a difference of opinion in the courts as to when and under what circumstances one has a right to sue, so as to make his forbearance to sue a consideration. The early English cases were to the effect that one has a right to sue only when his claim is actually in law a valid claim, and that forbearance to sue upon an unfounded claim can never support a promise given therefor, for the reason that forbearance to sue a claim not legally enforceable can be no detriment.⁸⁷ This view has, as we shall see, been overruled in England by modern decisions, but there are a few American cases which seem to support it.⁸⁸

(B) View That Right Must Be Reasonably Doubtful. The principle followed in other cases is that one has a right to sue where his claim is reasonably doubtful, and that forbearance to enforce a claim which might reasonably be thought doubtful is a sufficient consideration,⁸⁹ on the ground that "the reality of the claim which is given up must be measured, not by the state of the law as it is ultimately discovered to be, but by the state of the knowledge of the person who at the time has to judge and make the concession."⁹⁰

(c) Claims Clearly Unenforceable. From this it is clear that if the right is not doubtful there is no consideration, for there is neither benefit to the promisor nor detriment to the promisee, and therefore forbearance or a promise to forbear to insist on a claim clearly unenforceable cannot be a consideration.⁹¹ This is true for example of a promise to forbear from claims under an illegal contract, such as a gambling contract or one involving the commission of a crime;⁹² one which is unenforceable under the statute of frauds;⁹³ or one which is without consideration⁹⁴ or which is barred by the statute of limitations;⁹⁵ or the discontinuance of a vexatious lawsuit brought to harass the attorneys of an infant who have obtained a final judgment against a railroad company, and to delay the collection thereof.⁹⁶

(d) View That Claim Must Be Bona Fide. A third view is that one has a right to sue when he believes that he has a good cause of action, that it is enough if the plaintiff can show that at the defendant's request he forbore to prosecute a claim which he believed to be well founded, and that it is no answer to show that the claim was not well founded or was not even reasonably doubtful.⁹⁷

d. Right May Be Against Third Person. The waiver of a right or forbearance to sue may be in respect to a liability or debt of a third person and not of the promisor,⁹⁸ for as we have seen a benefit to a third person is sufficient considera-

Rep. 1127, decided in 1870, where it is said: "If he [a man] bona fide believes he has a fair chance of success, he has a reasonable ground for suing, and his forbearance to sue will constitute a good consideration. When such a person forbears to sue he gives up what he believes to be a right of action, and the other party gets an advantage, and, instead of being annoyed with an action, he escapes from the vexations incident to it. . . . It would be another matter if a person made a claim which he knew to be unfounded, and, by a compromise, obtained an advantage under it: in that case his conduct would be fraudulent." tion for a promise.⁹⁹ Thus an agreement to forbear to sue a debtor is a valid consideration for the promise of a third person to pay the debt.¹ The same is true of a promise not to institute bankruptcy proceedings against a third person,² of a promise to stay or discontinue, or the staying or discontinuing, of legal proceedings begun against a third party,³ or the release of a claim against a third person.⁴

e. Promise to Forbear and Actual Forbearance. An agreement to forbear is sometimes necessary. Mere forbearance to sue without any agreement to that effect is not a sufficient consideration for a promise of another to pay the debt of the person liable, and it can make no difference that the act of forbearance was induced by the promise.⁵ But actual forbearance without a promise to forbear is sufficient, if such forbearance be at the request of the promisor and in reliance on his promise.⁶ And actual forbearance is evidence of an agreement to forbear.⁷ An agreement to forbear bringing a suit which is not binding because it is for no definite time and for no valid consideration,⁸ is not binding on the

f. Mutual Promises to Forbear. Mutual promises¹⁰ of forbearance are always sufficient to support each other,¹¹ as in the case of a promise not to sue in consideration of a promise not to plead the statute of limitations;¹² a promise to waive the right of appeal from a decree construing a will, in consideration of a promise to consent to the immediate distribution of the estate;¹³ a promise to postpone an execution which has been issued on a judgment fraudulently entered in consideration of a promise that a motion shall not be made to set aside the judgment;¹⁴ a promise by one who has appealed from a judgment in another's favor not to procure a supersedeas after a certain term of the court which rendered the judgment, or that he will pay the judgment at that time if he does not procure a supersedeas in the meantime, in consideration of a promise to return the execution issued under the judgment unsatisfied.¹⁵

g. Time of Forbearance. It is no objection to the validity of the defendant's agreement that there was no particular time specified as the period for forbearance. The law presumes that it was to be for a reasonable time.¹⁶ If the forbearance is actually for a reasonable time it is a sufficient consideration.¹⁷ And there is a consideration in case of forbearance to sue on a note until after the maker's death,¹⁸ and in case of the guaranty of the payment of a debt on a stated day in consideration of forbearance, it being construed as meaning forbearance until the day stated for payment.¹⁹ A note payable at a future date given for a present debt is evidence of an agreement to suspend the remedy for the debt until the note is due.²⁰ On the other hand a promise to forbear for such time as the plain-

h. Compromise of Claims. A distinction has been suggested between the compromise of a claim as consideration and forbearance to sue upon a claim of a definite amount;²³ but generally the text-writers and courts have made no such distinction, but have applied the same rule in both cases.²⁴ The compromise of a disputed claim may uphold a promise, although the demand was unfounded.²⁵ For example where an action has been commenced by a landlord against his tenant for damages for misuser and bad cultivation, an arrangement by which the litigation is to be stopped and the lease surrendered carries with it a sufficient consideration to support it.²⁶ On the other hand if the party knows or ought to know that the claim has no foundation it is not a consideration.²⁷

i. Abandonment or Discontinuance of Proceedings. In an English case it is said in substance that where an action has been commenced, a promise made in consideration of staying proceedings is presumed against the promisor to have been well founded as "suits are not presumed causeless, and the promise argues cause in that he desired to stay off the suit."²⁸ But it is clear nevertheless that forbearance to continue a suit, knowing that one has no cause of action, will not differ from not bringing suit at all, and staying or dismissing such proceedings can be no consideration.²⁹ The dismissal of suits palpably unjust, it is said, forms no consideration for a promise. To make the settlement of assumed rights a sufficient consideration there must be at least an appearance of right sufficient to raise a possible doubt in favor of the party asserting the claim.³⁰ At the same time the abandonment, dismissal, or discontinuance of pending judicial proceedings is sustained as a consideration in a number of decided cases,³¹ although the defendant might have prevailed in the suit.³²

j. Discharge From Custody Under Writ. An agreement to discharge or the actual discharge of the promisor from custody under a writ of attachment or execution which is not void is a sufficient consideration.³³

k. Relinquishment of Defenses or Rights in Suit. It is a sufficient consideration to relinquish or agree to relinquish a defense in a suit,³⁴ to waive the right to a jury trial,³⁵ to forbear or agree to forbear from contesting a judgment,³⁶ or to abandon an appeal.⁸⁷ So also it is a sufficient consideration to agree to the adjournment of a suit.⁸⁸

12. PROMISE TO DO OR DOING WHAT PROMISOR IS BOUND TO DO — a. In General. A promise to do what the promisor is already bound to do cannot be a consideration, for if a person gets nothing in return for his promise but that to which he is already legally entitled, the consideration is unreal. Therefore as a general rule the performance of, or promise to perform, an existing legal obligation is not a valid consideration.⁸⁹ This legal obligation may arise from (1) the law independent of contract or it may arise from (2) a subsisting contract.

b. Subsisting Obligation in Law. Where a party is under a duty created or imposed by law to do what he does or promises to do his act or promise is clearly of no value and is not a sufficient consideration for a promise given in return.⁴⁰ Thus since a public officer is at law required to perform his duties for his salary or other stated compensation, a promise to pay him more than this is founded on

c. Subsisting Contractual Obligation—(1) IN GENERAL. The promise of a person to carry out a subsisting contract with the promisee or the performance of such contractual duty is clearly no consideration, as he is doing no more than he was already obliged to do and hence has sustained no detriment nor has the other party to the contract obtained any benefit.⁵⁴ Thus a promise to pay addi-tendance as a witness in an action pending in another state is a sufficient consideration for a promise by the party to pay the witness a sum in excess of the legal witness fees, since such attendance could not be compelled by subpoena. Armstrong v. Prentice, 86 Wis. 210, 56 N. W. 742.

Experts.—The same is true of a promise of a witness to testify as an expert. Barrus v. Phaneuf, 166 Mass. 123, 44 N. E. 141, 32 L. R. A. 619.

taining the logs, that he would pay them the amount owing to S; and it was held that as such logs were in S's possession, and detention by the men would have been illegal, their forbearance was no consideration for M's promise); *Tolhurst v. (II) ANOMALOUS VIEWS—(A) Right Either to Perform or Pay Damages. In some courts anomalous views are taken of the case where one of the parties to a valid contract refuses to perform the same, and the other promises some additional consideration to induce him to do so. Some of the courts have held that a party to a contract has the right to elect whether he will perform the contract or abandon it and pay damages, and that his giving up of this right of election furnishes a consideration for the new promise.⁶³

(B) Evidence of Mutual Rescission. In other courts it is held that the forming of the new contract is conclusive evidence that the parties have mutually day, and A should make certain payments to B at various stages of the work, and before the work was completed the house was blown down and A promised B an additional sum for rebuilding it.

agreed to rescind the old one and that the old one is thereby discharged; and the new one on the consideration of new rights and liabilities is mutually binding.⁶⁴

(c) Both Contracts in Force. In one state it has been held that the new agreement is independent of the old one and is to be regarded as an effort on the part of the promisor to mitigate the damage he has suffered from the breach of the first, that both contracts are therefore in force, and that the party refusing to perform may sue on the other's promise contained in the second, and the other may sue on the former's promise contained in the first.⁶⁵

(d) Unforeseen Difficulties and Mistake. In one state the court, while adopting the view that the obligation imposed by a contract is to perform the contract and not to pay damages, and that there is ordinarily no consideration for a promise of additional pay to induce performance, introduces the anomalous exception that where the party refusing to complete his contract does so by reason of some unforeseen and substantial difficulty in the performance of the contract, which was not known or anticipated by the parties when the contract was entered into, and which 'cast upon him an additional burden not contemplated, and the opposite party promises him extra pay or benefits if he will complete his contract, and he so promises, the promise to pay is supported by a valid consideration.⁶⁶ In an Illinois case it was held that a mistake of the contractor which caused him to underestimate the price of the work was also an exception.⁶⁷

(III) EXCEPTIONS—(A) Matters Outside of Contract. The consideration in the above cases is good and sufficient if it is the doing or promising to do something which was not either expressly or impliedly a part of the subsisting contract or not contemplated by the parties as falling within the provisions.⁶⁸ Thus in a well-known case where a seaman had signed articles of agreement to help navigate a vessel to England from the Falkland Isles, and the vessel proved to be

Duress.—A recent case in the federal court goes so far as to lay it down that where persons who have contracted to render services refuse without lawful excuse to perform the same unless paid a greater compensation, the employer has his election to sue for damages for breach of the contract or to enter into a new and substituted contract for the payment of the compensation demanded; and the fact that the former remedy is worthless because the employees are not able to respond in damages, and the employer is induced thereby, and to save himself from greater loss, to yield to the demands of the employees and agree to pay a higher compensation for the same services, does not constitute duress which will render the new contract invalid. W. 1105, where the court said: "In such a case the natural inference arising from the transaction, if unmodified by any equitable considerations, is rebutted, and the presumption arises that by the voluntary and mutual promises of the parties their respective rights and obligations under the original contract are waived, and those of the new or modified contract substituted for them. Cases of this character form an exception to the general rule that a promise to do that which a party is already legally bound to do is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise by the other party to the contract to give the former an additional compensation or benefit." Detsch, 61 Mo. 290 (where money was subscribed to induce a contractor to complete the grading of a street begun under a contract with the city, and in consideration of that agreement the contractor made a settlement with the city for the work then done, and entered into engagements for its completion, which arrangements and expenditures he was not obliged, under his contract with the city, to make, and which were necessarily productive of loss and injury in case of non-payment of the subscription, it

unseaworthy, a promise of extra reward to induce him to abide by his contract was held to be binding on the ground that such a contract as that which the seaman had entered into contained an implied condition that the ship should be seaworthy.⁶⁹ This principle applies in a great variety of cases.⁷⁰

(b) Moral Obligation. The doctrine just discussed applies only where the thing done or promised is that which the party is legally and not merely morally bound to do. If he is only under a moral obligation, as in case of the payment of or promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations, or for services rendered at request in the past, he gives something he is not legally compellable to give, and there is a consideration for the promise given in return.⁷¹

(c) Substituted Agreement. The cases considered above must be distinguished from those in which the parties in carrying out a contract become involved in mutual difficulties and disputes as to their rights and liabilities, and thereupon, the contract being executory on both sides, enter into a new one, which is intended as a substitute for the old and to be a discharge of it by mutual agreement. Such agreements are binding.⁷²

third person or the performance of it does not constitute a valuable consideration.⁷³ The contrary is the law in England,⁷⁴ and it has been maintained recently by an American writer that in most of the American cases the English cases were not brought to the attention of the court, and that the latest decisions show a marked tendency toward the English rule.⁷⁵

e. Part Payment of Debt and Agreement to Discharge Residue—(1) IN GENERAL. Under the principles just discussed the payment of a smaller sum in satisfaction of a larger is not a good discharge of a debt, for it is doing no more than the debtor is already bound to do, and is therefore no consideration for the creditor's promise to forego the residue.⁷⁶ This does not apply, however, where

Marriage.—In Maryland it was held that where a father promises A that if he will marry his daughter he will give a certain amount as a marriage portion, and A afterward marries the daughter, the father will be bound by the promise; but where, after A's engagement to be married to the daughter, the father in a letter to his brother expresses his approbation of the proposed marriage and states what amount he intends to bestow upon his daughter, this is not sufficient to entitle A to recover that amount of the father. Ogden v. Ogden, 1 Bland (Md.) 284. So in a New York case it was held that where at the time of a loan made by plaintiff to defendant, defendant was under a legal obligation to marry plaintiff's daughter, the performance of such obligation was not a sufficient consideration for plaintiff's promise, made after the loan, to forgive defendant the debt if he fulfilled his obligation to marry plaintiff's daughter. *Gerlach v. Leading case.—This question was settled in England once for all in Eastwood v. Kenyon, 11 A. & E. 438, 4 Jur. 1081, 9 L. J. Q. B. 409, 3 P. & D. 276, 39 E. C. L. 245, and a final blow given by Lord Denman to the doctrine that past benefits would support a subsequent promise on the ground of the moral obligation resting on the promisor. "The doctrine," said Lord Denman, "would annihilate the necessity for any consideration at all, inasmuch as the mere fact of giving a promise creates a moral obligation to perform it." Anson Contr. 95.

There are decisions or dicta to the contrary strongest moral obligation to support his infirm and indigent parents, but as he is under no legal obligation to do so, the law will not enforce a promise on his part to pay another who has done so without his request.⁸³ So a father may be under the strongest moral obligation to support his adult indigent child, but this moral obligation is not sufficient to support an express promise to pay expenses previously incurred on behalf of such a child.⁸⁴ The same is true of a promise by an executor in pursuance merely of a pious wish to carry out the intentions of the testator,⁸⁵ and of a promise by a husband to carry out what he believes to be the wishes of his deceased wife.⁸⁶ So by the weight of authority where services are rendered to another without any request and under circumstances which do not raise an implied contract on his part to pay for them, a promise founded on motives of honor or gratitude is not on a sufficient consideration.⁸⁷ And where a debt has been voluntarily released an express promise does not revive it or form a sufficient consideration to support a new promise.⁸⁸ The general rule that a moral

Promise to pay parent's debt.—There is no such obligation upon children to pay debts of their father, from whose estate they have not received any benefit, as will constitute a moral consideration which will sustain a new note given by a child for the principal of the father's note after it has been discharged in bankruptcy. *McElven v. 85. A widow sued her husband's executor for breach of an agreement to allow her to occupy a house which had been the property of her husband on payment of a small portion of the ground-rent. The executor in making the agreement was carrying out a wish expressed by the deceased that his wife should have the use of the house. Where a mortgage of a homestead is void because the wife's acknowledgment is defective, the husband's agreement after default obligation is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise does not apply to a moral obligation enforceable in equity. This has been said to be sufficient.⁸⁹

14. PAST CONSIDERATION — a. In General. By the great weight of authority a past consideration, if it imposed no legal obligation at the time it was furnished, will support no promise whatever.⁹⁰ A past consideration, it is said, is some act

been discharged by a judgment;⁹⁴ where a marriage which is relied on as a consideration had taken place before the promise;⁹⁵ and where a warranty is given by a seller of property after a sale without a warranty, express or implied, and without any new consideration.⁹⁶

b. Previous Request. In an early leading English case it was laid down broadly that a past consideration will support a subsequent promise if the consideration was given at the request of the promisor;⁹⁷ but this case is criticized by Anson, who declares it not supported by modern authority.⁹⁸ The correct rule according to this author is that if a request is made which is in substance an offer of a promise upon terms to be afterward ascertained, and services are rendered in pursuance of that request, a subsequent promise to pay a fixed sum may be regarded as a part of the same transaction, or else as evidence to assist the jury in determining what would be a reasonable sum.⁹⁹ And such is the view of some of the American courts,¹ the court permitting the jury to imply a previous request from the fact that the service was beneficial to the promisor, when there is no evidence expressly negating the request.² But if no promise could be implied from the request, as where the services were understood to be gratuitous, then a subsequent express promise is without consideration.³ And if the express promise is different from what the law would have implied it is not enforceable.⁴

c. Moral Obligation—(1) IN GENERAL. There are some states, as we have seen, where without any evidence of previous request the promise will be sustained because founded on a moral obligation. But these decisions are anomalous and opposed to the weight of authority.⁵

(2) MORAL OBLIGATION FOUNDED ON PREVIOUS BENEFIT TO PROMISOR. In some courts a modified doctrine of moral obligation is adopted, and it is held that a moral obligation founded on previous benefits, received by the promisor at the hands of the promisee, will support a promise by him.⁶

(3) MORAL OBLIGATION FOUNDED ON FRAUD OR DURESS. Where a person has obtained a benefit through his duress or fraud he cannot take advantage of this to show that he had made no previous request.⁷ Thus where services are rendered under these circumstances, one may recover their value, even though when they were rendered there was no intention or expectation that they should be paid for.⁸

d. Promise in Pursuance of Previous Understanding. The promise may be binding because executed in pursuance of a previous understanding. Thus while one who signs a note after it has been executed and delivered and after the consideration has passed between the original parties, incurs no liability unless there is proof of some new consideration,⁹ yet where it appears that although a note or Services of wife during fraudulent marriage.—It has been held that where a married man by fraud induces a woman to marry him, and she lives with him until she finds that he was already married and then leaves him, she may maintain an action for her services. Fox v. Dawson, 8 Mart. (La.) 94; Higgins v. Breen, 9 Mo. 497. Such an action is, however, denied in some states, the remedy being an action by the woman for the deceit. *Cooper v. other contract was signed after its delivery it was the original agreement that the further security was to be given, and it is so given pursuant to such original agreement, it relates back to the inception of the first contract and no new consideration is required.¹⁰

e. Subsidiary Promises. So the consideration of the principal contract will support subsidiary promises.¹¹

f. Consideration Partly Past and Partly Present or Executory. A promise founded partly on a past consideration and partly on an executory one is enforceable.¹²

g. Preexisting Liability.¹³ A preexisting liability is a good consideration for a new promise.¹⁴ So where a debtor gives additional security to his creditor, or a principal to his surety, on a preexisting debt, without any new consideration, there is a sufficient consideration.¹⁵

h. Former Promise Unenforceable by Act of Law—(1) IN GENERAL. A moral obligation may be sufficient to sustain a promise where it is one which has been once a valuable consideration, but has ceased to be binding from some supervenient act of the law.¹⁶ The principle upon which these cases rest is that where the consideration was originally beneficial to the party promising, yet if he be protected from liability by some provision of the statute or common law, meant for his advantage, he may renounce the benefit of that law; and if he promises to pay the debt, which is only what an honest man ought to do, he is then bound by the law to perform it.¹⁷ A promise, it is said, may be supported by a moral obligation, where the obligation grows out of an original legal obligation that has been extinguished without being performed.¹⁸

(ii) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. A debt barred by the statute of limitations may be revived by a new promise to pay it by the debtor but not by a third person who was not morally bound to pay it.¹⁹

(iii) BANKRUPTCY OR INSOLVENCY LAWS. The moral obligation of a debtor who has been discharged in bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings to pay his debts in full is a sufficient consideration for his promise to pay a debt discharged.²⁰

Right of action extinguished by act of parties.—The rule that when the precedent original consideration is sufficient to sustain the promise, but the right of action is suspended or barred by some positive rule of statutory or common law, the debtor may by a subsequent promise waive the exemption which the law has interposed, indirectly for his benefit, but mainly from reasons of public policy, applies only to cases where the original right of action is extinguished by the act of the law and not to those extinguished by the act of the parties. *Stafford v. (iv) CONTRACTS OF MARRIED WOMEN. It has been held that a promise made by a woman during widowhood or after divorce to pay debts or perform contracts made during coverture, and not binding on her then, is enforceable.²¹ The weight of authority, however, seems to be the other way, on the ground that her original promise was void and not like an infant's simply voidable.²²

(v) CONTRACTS OF INFANTS AND INSANE PERSONS. A promise by one after coming of age to pay debts or perform contracts made during infancy, and which could not be enforced against him, is valid and binding on him.²³ So a promise by a person while sane to pay for goods furnished to himself and family while he was insane will bind him.²⁴

(vi) CONTRACTS UNENFORCEABLE UNDER LAW SINCE REPEALED. It has been held that where bills, void for usury, are renewed after the usury laws have been repealed, the consideration for the renewal being the past loan, they are valid.²⁵ But this would seem contrary to the rule that the repeal of a statute which makes a contract void does not validate a contract entered into while the statute was in force.²⁶ And it has been expressly decided in Michigan that where liquor was sold in violation of a statute afterward repealed, a promise to pay therefor made after the repeal was without consideration.²⁷

i. Incurring Legal Liability at Request. If one incurs a legal liability at the request of another, such liability is a sufficient consideration to support a promise of the person at whose request it is incurred.²⁸ So if one pays money at another's request.²⁹

j. Voluntarily Doing What Promisor Is Bound to Do. It is laid down in some cases, both in England and America, that where the plaintiff voluntarily does that whereunto the defendant was legally compellable, and the defendant afterward in consideration thereof expressly promises he will be bound by such a promise.³⁰ Anson criticizes the rule thus stated as "if not non-existent resting at least on scanty and unsatisfactory authority."³¹ Nevertheless there are American decisions supporting the doctrine.³²

k. Consideration Expressed in Past Tense. The fact that the consideration is expressed in a written contract in the past tense does not necessarily show that it is a past consideration.³³

E. Adequacy of Consideration — 1. IN GENERAL. So long as it is something of real value in the eye of the law, whether or not the consideration is adequate to the promise is generally immaterial. The slightest consideration is sufficient to support the most onerous obligation; the inadequacy, as has been well said, is for the parties to consider at the time of making the agreement, and not for the court when it is sought to be enforced.³⁴ The giving of a

31. Anson Contr. 121, where it is said that the English cases which are cited to support this exception all turned upon the liability of parish authorities for medical attendance upon paupers who were settled in one parish but resident in another, it being held that a suit could be maintained for services rendered against the parish legally bound to render them, and which had after their rendition promised to pay for them. Watson v. Turner, Buller N. P. 147; Atkins v. Bauwell, 2 East 505; Wing v. Mill, 1 B. & Ald. 104; Paynter v. Williams, 1 Cr. & M. 810. The true ground of the decision in Watson v. Turner, Buller N. P. 129, says Anson [quoting from 1 Selw. N. P. 51], was that "the defendants being bound by law to provide for the poor of the parish, derived a benefit from the act of the plaintiff, who afforded that assistance to the pauper which it was the duty of the defendants to have provided; this was the consideration, and the subsequent promise by the defendants to pay for such assistance was evidence from which it might be inferred that the consideration was performed by the plaintiff with the consent of the defendants, and consequently sufficient to support a general indebitatus assumpsit for work and labor performed by the plaintiff for the defendants, at their request." Anson Contr. 102.

Quasi-contract.—Some of the American cases appear to enforce the contract on the ground of quasi-contract, that is, on the ground that the defendant has been enriched at the expense of the plaintiff and ought to repay. Curtis v. Parks, 55 Cal. 106; Gleason v. Dyke, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 390; Doty v. Wilson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 378. And see McMorris v. Herndon, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 56, 21 Am. Dec. 515, where it is said that where a person is under a legal obligation to pay money and another pays it for him without request, the law raises an implied assumpsit to refund, without any express promise on his part.

Ratification.—It is intimated in one case that in such cases, the defendant "ratifies" the act of the plaintiff who represented him in the transaction, and the ratification is equivalent to a prior authority. Gleason v. Dyke, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 390.

exchange of sums of money or coin whose value is exactly fixed.⁴⁰ Thus a promise to pay one cent will not support a promise to pay six hundred dollars, except under extraordinary circumstances.⁴¹ And it was at one time considered that in the case of contracts in restraint of trade, courts would inquire into the adequacy of the consideration, but this idea is now exploded.⁴²

b. In Equity. In equity inadequacy of consideration is often treated as corroborative evidence of fraud or undue influence, which will enable a promisor to resist a suit for specific performance or have his agreement set aside.⁴³ But mere inadequacy of consideration, unless it is so gross as "to shock the conscience and amount in itself to conclusive evidence of fraud," is not of itself a ground on which specific performance of a contract will be refused or on which a contract will be rescinded for fraud or undue influence.⁴⁴

required by some statute the consideration for a contract need not appear upon its face, but may be proved by parol or inferred from the terms of the agreement.⁴⁵ The words "for value received" in a written contract are prima facie evidence of a sufficient consideration;⁴⁶ but they do not necessarily import a consideration in money, for a promise to pay in the future may be shown to have been the consideration.⁴⁷ And notwithstanding the admission "for value received" the writing may show on its face a clearly past consideration, and hence no legal consideration.⁴⁸

G. Contradicting Statement of Consideration. Most courts hold that the consideration may be shown by parol to be different from that expressed in the agreement.⁴⁹

see Borell v. Dann, 2 Hare 440, 24 Eng. Ch. 440, where Wigram, V. C., says: "Mere inadequacy of consideration is not a ground even for refusing a decree for specific performance of an unexecuted contract, and still less can it be a ground for rescinding an executed contract. The only exception is where the inadequacy of consideration is so gross as of itself to prove fraud or imposition on the part of the purchaser. Fraud in the purchaser is of the essence of the objection to the contract in such a case."

H. Failure of Consideration⁵⁰ — 1. IN GENERAL. Strictly speaking, as has been well pointed out, there can be no such thing as a failure of consideration. The promisor either receives the consideration he has bargained for or he does not. If he does not, then there is no enforceable agreement, for there is no consideration; and if he does receive the consideration how can it afterward fail? It may become less valuable or of no value at all, but that does not affect the agreement. Failure of consideration is in fact simply want of consideration.⁵¹ Nevertheless it is laid down in a number of cases that when the consideration for a promise wholly fails the promise is without consideration and unenforceable.⁵² But this must mean that in a contract with an executory consideration, the execution of the consideration is a condition precedent to the liability on the promise, and the failure to execute the consideration discharges the promisor.⁵³ On a sale of personal property it is generally held that in the absence of fraud or warranty it is no ground for defeating the action for the price that the article proves so defective in quality as to be worthless.⁵⁴ The rule has been announced by other cases that if the article is wholly worthless and of no value there is an entire failure of consideration, without reference to whether there be fraud or a breach of warranty;⁵⁵ but the idea of an implied warranty or condition is probably at the bottom of this theory.⁵⁶ Where the consideration fails because of impossibility of performance the promise is unenforceable.⁵⁷ And it has been held that failure of consideration may be set up as a defense in an action for the price by the purchaser of a void patent.⁵⁸ It may also be set up by one who purchases a wholly valueless

See 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contracts," § 229. And, generally, as to parol evidence see EVIDENCE.

50. Other uses of the term.—The expression "failure of consideration" is used in many cases to describe the non-enforceability of a contract where the subject-matter is, unknown to the parties, not in existence. But this topic belongs properly to the subject of mistake. See infra, VI, B, 8, e. It is also used to describe a failure to perform, which discharges the promisor, as in the case of a warranty or a condition precedent. See infra, IX, F.

But this is because the contract for the sale patent,⁵⁹ or by one contracting for the right to sell a thing represented to be patented but not so.⁶⁰ It has also been held that failure of consideration may be pleaded as a defense in the case of a promise made under a supposed legal liability which did not in fact exist,⁶¹ in case of the failure of title to a chattel sold,⁶² and in case of total failure of the title to land sold.⁶³ It is not essential to a plea of failure of consideration that the purchaser of a worthless article shall return it.⁶⁴

2. PARTIAL FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. When there is a failure of a part of a lawful consideration⁶⁵ the part which failed is simply a nullity and imparts no taint to the residue. In such a case, as no particular amount of consideration is required, the promise may be enforced. In other words if there is a substantial consideration left it will still be sufficient to sustain the contract.⁶⁶ In some states, however, the statute makes a partial failure of consideration a ground for rescission.⁶⁷ Even in the absence of a statute if the diminution or failure is such as in effect and reality to take away all the value of the consideration it will be regarded as having wholly failed.⁶⁸ And a partial failure of consideration has been held a good defense pro tanto in some cases.⁶⁹

3. SUBSEQUENT DEPRECIATION IN VALUE. If there is consideration, the fact that it subsequently diminishes in value or becomes of no value at all cannot relieve the promisor from liability on his promise,⁷⁰ as when a note sold afterward becomes of no value,⁷¹ stock purchased becomes worthless,⁷² a patent becomes worthless because of improvements,⁷³ or a house rented for a term is destroyed before the end of the term.⁷⁴

capacities.⁷⁷ It is not necessary, however, that both parties shall be ascertained or in existence at the time the offer is made, if the offer is accepted by one who is within its terms.⁷⁸

B. Capacity to Contract. To render a contract binding the parties must have the capacity to contract. Some persons in the law are altogether incapable of contracting or of entering into particular contracts, while others are under a partial or qualified incapacity.⁷⁹

C. Parties Entitled to Enforce Contract — 1. IN GENERAL. The obligation and duty arising out of a contract are due only to those with whom it is made; and therefore an action for the breach of a contract can as a rule be brought only by one who is a party to the contract.⁸⁰ The reason for the rule that privity of

In the leading case of Faulkner v. Lowe, 2 Exch. 595, 597, the defendant borrowed money from a fund in which he and others were jointly interested and covenanted to repay the money to the joint account. It was held that he could not be sued upon the covenant. Pollock, C. B., said: "The covenant, to my mind, is senseless. I do not know what is meant, in point of law, by a man paying himself."

Meacham, 63 Vt. 231, 22 Atl. 572, 12 L. R. A. 676 (where an administrator, becoming indebted to the estate, to secure the debt made a note and mortgage payable to himself as administrator, and they were retained by him and found among his papers at his death, and it was held that the contract was invalid for want of two parties). See 11 Cent. Dig. tit. "Contracts," § 790 et seq.; and infra, V, C, 4, a, (I); V, C, 4, b, (II), (A).

Liability of vendor without title.—One selling land to which he has no title does not thereby become a debtor for the price to the true owner. Cecil v. Negro Rose, 17 Md. 92.

contract is necessary to an action founded on a breach of contract is that otherwise a man's responsibility for not carrying out his agreement with another would have no limit; there would be no bounds to actions if the ill effect of the failure of a man to perform his agreement could be followed down the chain of results to the final effect.⁸¹ This principle, it has been held, prevents one not a party to a sale of goods, but who purchases them from the vendee or a remote vendee and sustains damage because of defects therein, from maintaining an action against the original vendor.⁸² It has also been applied in the case of contracts for the manufacture of an article or for work and labor;⁸³ to contracts to support or furnish medical attendance;⁸⁴ to a bond for the performance of a contract;⁸⁵ to the liability of attorneys and abstracters of title⁸⁶ or clerks of courts and record-

Objection that contract is not binding.—Third persons cannot object to an agreement on the ground of its lacking the requisites of a valid agreement. Hughes v. Lumsden, 8 Ill. App. 185; Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. v. Kobby, 135 Ind. 357, 35 N. E. 392; Mason v. Crosby, 3 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 258, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,236.

Another reason is given in a New Jersey case: "The object of the parties in inserting in their contract specific undertakings, with respect to the work to be done is to create obligations and duties inter sese. These engagements and undertakings must necessarily be subject to modifications and waiver by the contracting parties. If third persons can acquire a right in the contract, in the nature of a duty to have it performed as contracted for, the parties will be deprived of control over their own contract." Marvin Safe Co. v. Ward, 46 N. J. L. 19, 24.

82. A vendor of goods assumes no responsibility and incurs no liability beyond that which results from his contract with his vendee. With remote vendees of the article who purchase it by subsales from those to whom it was originally sold he enters into no contract, either express or implied, and takes on himself no obligation or duty whatever. Davidson v. Nichols, 11 Allen (Mass.) 514; and other cases in the notes following.

83. Contracts for manufacture of articles.—Where a person contracts with another to build him a wagon, and builds it so badly that when it is used by a third person to whom the vendee has loaned it it breaks down, injuring such third person, the latter cannot recover damages against the manufacturer. *Winterbottom v. Contracts for work and labor.—If a blacksmith negligently shoes another's horse and a third person hires the horse from the owner and is injured while riding it by reason of the defective shoeing he cannot sue the blacksmith. Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 408, 54 Am. Dec. 455. And see Heaven v.

Herzog*, 145 Ind. 255, 44 N. E. 457, 57 Am. St. Rep. 204, 32 L. R. A. 837; Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. St. 70, 21 Atl. 244, 23 Am. St. Rep. 220, 12 L. R. Contract to support.—Where a person contracts to support another, and then refuses to fulfil his agreement, whereby the other becomes chargeable to the town, as a pauper, the town has no right of action against him. Milton v. Story, 11 Vt. 101, 34 Am. Dec. 671.

Contract to furnish medical attendance.—Where an employer contracts with an employee to furnish him with medical attendance in case of accident, a physician cannot recover from the employer for professional services rendered the employee at the latter's request when injured. Thomas Mfg. Co. v. Prather, 65 Ark. 27, 44 S. W. 218.

85. Where a bond is given for the faithful performance of a contract for the erection of a building or other work the bondsmen, whose undertaking is for the benefit of the other contracting party and not for materialmen and laborers, are not liable upon their bond to third parties for labor performed or material furnished. *Parker v. Examination of title and abstracts.—Where an attorney is employed by a prospective purchaser of real estate to examine the title, and without using the care and skill

ers;⁸⁷ and by some courts to contracts between a city and a water company for a sufficient water-supply.⁸⁸ This principle does not prevent the vendee of a chattel from recovering from the seller damages paid by him to a third person for an injury received because of a defect in the chattel.⁸⁹

2. WHERE FALSE REPRESENTATION IS MADE. Where, as an inducement to enter into a contract with him, a person makes a false representation to the other party, which may be relied on by the latter as a defense to an action on the contract or may give him a right of action for damages, a third person who has relied upon it and suffered loss has no right of action against the person making the representation, unless it was made with the intention that it should be acted upon by him.⁹⁰

3. WHERE BREACH OF DUTY IS CONNECTED WITH CONTRACT. If the defendant has been guilty of a breach of duty apart from the contract he will be liable to all to whom that duty extends, and he will not be protected by setting up a contract in respect to the same matter with another person. There is a general breach of duty not limited to the vendee, where a person sells an article which he knows will do damage to others and conceals that fact or where the article is eminently dangerous.⁹¹

4. PROMISE FOR THE BENEFIT OF THIRD PERSON — a. Doctrine That Third Person Cannot Sue — (1) IN GENERAL. In England it is held, subject to the exceptions which he is bound to use reports that the title is good, a third person damaged by relying on his report and purchasing the land has no right of action against him. *District of Columbia Nat. Sav. 88. Where a water company contracts with a city to keep at all times a sufficient supply of water for the use of the city for the extinguishment of fires and fails to keep its contract, whereby the house of a citizen is burned for want of a sufficient supply of water, many courts hold that such person cannot sue the company on the ground that there is no privity of contract.

hereafter stated, that where two persons make a contract in which one of them promises to confer benefits upon a third party, the latter cannot sue upon the contract, at law or in equity, for the money or other benefit which it is promised that he shall receive.⁹² The same doctrine, with some difference as to the exceptions, has been held, in the absence of a statute, in some of the United States⁹³

Grounds.—In Price v. Easton, 4 B. & Ad. 433, 2 L. J. K. B. 51, 1 N. & M. 303, 24 E. C. L. 193, the judges all reached the conclusion above stated, but based their decision on different grounds. Thus, Denman, C. J., observed that the declaration could not be supported, as it did not show any consideration for the promise moving from the plaintiff to the defendant. Littledale, J., observed that no privity was shown between the plaintiff and the defendant, and Taunton, J., said that it was consistent with all the matter alleged in the declaration that the plaintiff might have been entirely ignorant of the arrangement between the real contracting parties, while Patterson, J., based his opinion on the ground that there was no promise to the plaintiff alleged.

and in some of the federal cases.⁹⁴ The reason is that it is held essential that the consideration shall move from the plaintiff; there must be privity between the parties in order to support an action on the contract.⁹⁵

(II) EXCEPTIONS—(A) Trust. To the general rule above stated there are several exceptions or apparent exceptions. In the first place, where the promise of benefit to the third party creates a trust in his favor he may enforce the trust in a court of equity.⁹⁶ Where one pays money to another for the use of a third the latter may sue the holder for it.⁹⁷

(B) Quasi-Contract. Where one through a contract with another has obtained money or property which rightfully belongs to a third person, the latter may sue therefor in his own name, as the law creates both the privity and the promise. The transaction does not create a trust in the proper sense, nor does the Mistake as to person.—Where a person by mistake pays money to A for the use of B, to whom he is not indebted, intending to pay it for the use of C, to whom he owes it, this does not give C a right of action for the money, but the person paying must recover it back as having been paid by mistake. Wilson v. Greer, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 513.

third person's right arise out of the contract between the promisor and promisee; but it arises out of an independent contract created by law, or quasi-contract, between the promisor and the third person.⁹⁸

(c) Near Relationship. In England it was early held that where one made a binding promise to another to do something for the benefit of the son or daughter of the latter, the nearness of the relationship and the fact that the contract was prompted by natural affection would give a right of action to the person interested.⁹⁹ And the same doctrine was held in Massachusetts.¹ These cases, however, have been overruled and a contrary doctrine established.² The contrary doctrine is also established in some of the other states.³

(d) Agency. If a person makes a contract as agent for another, without disclosing his agency to the other party, his principal may maintain an action on the contract.⁴ This, however, is only an apparent exception to the general rule that a third person cannot sue on a contract, for the principal is a party to the contract.

(e) Novation. The case of novation is also an apparent exception only. Where a debtor and his creditor and a third person enter into an agreement by which the third person is to pay the debt to the creditor and the debtor is released⁵ there is a novation, and the creditor may sue the third person. In such a case, however, there is a contract between the creditor and the third person. If the promise is made by the third person to the debtor and the creditor is not a party thereto he cannot sue, unless the circumstances bring the case within an exception to the general rule.⁶

States in which third person may sue.—In some states where a promise is made to another for the benefit of a near relative the latter is allowed to sue on the promise; but in these states a third person for whose benefit a promise is made is allowed to sue thereon whether there is any relationship or not. 6. Borden v. Boardman, 157 Mass. 410, 32 N. E. 469; St. Louis Second Nat. Bank v. Missouri Grand Lodge F. & A. M., 98 U. S. 123, 25 L. ed. 75, in the latter of which cases it was said: "Where a debt already exists from one person to another, a promise by a third person to pay such debt being primarily for the benefit of the original debtor, and to relieve him from liability to pay it (there being no novation), he has a right of action against the promisor for his own indemnity; and, if the original creditor can also sue, the promisor would be liable to two separate ac-states the English doctrine that where a person makes a promise to another for the benefit of a third person the latter cannot maintain an action upon it is not recognized to the full extent, but it is held, subject to the qualifications hereafter stated, that the action may be maintained. This is now the prevailing doctrine in the United States.⁷ This is sometimes based on general principles of law and

a code state the "real party in interest" may sue, although the party in whose name the contract is made is declared by the code to be a trustee of an express trust and may also sue in his own name. But a recovery by either would be a bar to an action by the other.⁸ And generally one in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another may sue on it in his own name, even when an action might be maintained by the other.⁹

(11) LIMITS TO THE DOCTRINE THAT THIRD PERSON MAY SUE—(A) In General. In many of the cases the doctrine is stated broadly that a person may maintain an action on a promise made for his benefit, although not a party to the contract; but this statement of the doctrine is too broad. By the weight of authority the action cannot be maintained merely because the third person will be incidentally benefited by performance of the contract; but he must be a party to the consideration, or the contract must have been entered into for his benefit, and he must have some legal or equitable interest in its performance.¹⁰ If the person on a contract under seal, and that it is only an action of assumpsit that will lie by a person for whose benefit a promise has been made to another.²⁷

(D) Contract Must Be Binding. To entitle one to maintain an action on a promise made to another for his benefit, it is necessary of course that there shall be a valid and binding contract. For example there must be a consideration.²⁸

(E) Failure of Consideration and Rescission of Contract. To a suit by a third person upon a contract made for his benefit, a failure of consideration or a rescission of the contract by the parties thereto, before the acceptance by the plaintiff of the stipulation in his favor, is a defense;²⁹ but it has been held that after such acceptance by the beneficiary the parties to the contract cannot rescind it.³⁰

D. Parties Against Whom Contracts May Be Enforced — 1. IN GENERAL. A liability ex contractu or quasi ex contractu cannot be imposed upon a man otherwise than by his act or consent and therefore as a general rule an action on a contract cannot be maintained against a person who is not a party to the contract.³¹ Thus an agreement between persons by which one agrees to sell goods to the other, taking the notes of a third person in payment, does not bind such third person to give the notes, even though he may know of the agreement.³² So also if a person employs another to do work for him he is not liable to an action for services performed in the work by a third person under a contract between such third person and the employee,³³ nor for materials furnished by a third person under a contract with the employee,³⁴ unless the third person proves a new contract, express or implied, with himself.³⁵ A creditor cannot sue the debtor of his debtor;³⁶ nor can one by paying another's debt give himself a right of action against the debtor.³⁷

2. ASSIGNEES AND REPRESENTATIVES. The parties to a contract, except in a limited class of agreements, such as those for personal services and the like, are presumed to have intended to bind their assignees and legal representatives as well as themselves;³⁸ and hence a party to the contract has the same right to enforce it against such third persons as he has to enforce it against the other party to it.³⁹

3. PRINCIPALS AND AGENTS. A principal is bound by the contract of his agent within his authority, even though he is not named in the contract or his interest disclosed.⁴⁰

4. RATIFICATION BY RECEIPT OF BENEFITS. If with a full knowledge of all the facts a person ratify an agreement which another person has improperly made concerning the property of the person ratifying it, he thereby makes himself a party to it. He is in precisely the same position in this respect as if the original agreement had been made with him.⁴¹ And it has been held that one who knowingly accepts the benefits intended as the consideration coming to him under a contract, voluntarily made by another in his behalf, becomes bound by reason of such acceptance to perform his part of the contract.⁴²

5. CONTRACT MAY IMPOSE DUTY ON THIRD PERSONS. While a contract cannot impose any contractual obligation upon one not a party to it, it may impose a duty upon third persons not to interfere with its due performance. It seems to be well settled that where there is an express contract of service for a definite period of time, a person who induces either the servant or the master to break it is liable to an action; and some courts apply the rule to other contracts.⁴³

VI. REALITY OF CONSENT.

A. In General. Since mutual consent is essential to every agreement, and agreement is generally essential to contract, there can as a rule be no binding contract where there is no real consent. Apparent consent may be unreal because of mistake,⁴⁴ misrepresentation,⁴⁵ fraud,⁴⁶ duress,⁴⁷ or undue influence;⁴⁸ or because of mental incapacity.⁴⁹

B. Mistake — 1. DEFINITION. Mistake is occasioned by ignorance or misconception of some matter, under the influence of which an act is done; and arises where one of the parties does not mean the same thing as the other, or where one or both while meaning the same thing form untrue conclusions as to the subject-matter of the agreement.⁵⁰

2. EFFECT IN GENERAL. Mistake does not of itself affect the validity of contracts at all.⁵¹ But mistake may be such as to prevent any real agreement from being formed, in which case the agreement is not merely voidable, as in the case of fraud,⁵² but is absolutely void, both at law and in equity.⁵³ Or mistake may occur in the expression of a real agreement, in which case, subject to rules of evidence, the instrument may be reformed in equity.⁵⁴

3. AGREEMENT PRESUMED FROM ASSENT. The general rule of law is that a person is bound by an agreement to which he has assented, where this assent is uninfluenced by fraud, violence, undue influence, or the like, and he will not be permitted to say that he did not intend to agree to its terms.⁵⁵

4. EFFECT OF SIGNING WRITTEN INSTRUMENT — a. In General. As a written contract is the highest evidence of the terms of an agreement between the parties to it, it is the duty of every contracting party to learn and know its contents before he signs and delivers it. He owes this duty to the other party to the contract, because the latter may, and probably will, pay his money and shape his action in reliance upon the agreement. He owes it to the public which, as a matter of public policy, treats the written contract as a conclusive answer to the question, What was the agreement?⁵⁶ Hence the courts do not permit one to avoid a contract into which he has entered on the ground that he did not attend to its terms, that he did not read the document which he signed, that he supposed it was different in its terms, or that it was a mere form.⁵⁷

United States.—Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. ed. 203, where it was said: "It will not do for a man to enter into a contract and, when called upon to respond to its obligations, to say that he did not read it when he signed it, or did not know what it contained. If this were permitted, contracts would not be worth the paper on which they are written. But such is not the law. A contractor must stand by the words of his contract; and, if he will not read what he signs, he alone is responsible for his omission." See also Muller v. Kelly, 116 Fed. 545; Wagner v. National L. Ins. Co., 90 Fed. 395, 33 C. C. A. 121; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Belliwith, 83 Fed. 437, 28 C. C. A. 358;

b. Person Unable to Read. If a person cannot read the language in which a contract is written, it is as much his duty to procure some person to read and explain it to him before he signs it as it would be to read it before he signed it if he were able to do so, and his failure to obtain a reading and explanation of it is such gross negligence as will estop him from avoiding it on the ground that he was ignorant of its contents.⁵⁸

c. Fraud. Of course if the other party induces the signer to sign the paper without reading it, and to rely on his statement of the contents, this may give the signer a right, if the statement was fraudulent, to avoid the contract as against him on the ground of fraud.⁵⁹ But this would not go to the existence of the agreement itself and the right of rescission would therefore not exist as to third parties ignorant of it.⁶⁰

d. Substituted Document. Where some trick is used to substitute another instrument for the one which it is intended to sign, as where a promissory note is substituted for a receipt, and in like cases, the signature has no legal effect, not because the other party is guilty of fraud, but because the person who perpetrates the fraud knows that the other has no intention to execute that kind of an instrument, and hence there is no agreement which can give rights to any one,⁶¹ except where the signer is estopped by negligence or otherwise to set up the truth as against bona fide third persons.⁶²

5. EFFECT OF ACCEPTING PAPER CONTAINING TERMS. Where one accepts a paper which he knows contains the terms of an offer, he will be bound by it, and cannot be heard to say that he did not read it or did not know what it contained.⁶³ This principle finds frequent application in the case of bills of lading, express receipts, and the like.⁶⁴ So where a person receives an insurance policy pursuant to an application, it is his duty to examine it and see those things in respect thereto which are open to ordinary observation by a person of ordinary intelligence, and if he neglects to do so, taking it for granted that what he has received is what he applied for or intended to apply for, such conduct on his part amounts to an acceptance of the policy received regardless of whether it corresponds to

6. MISTAKE OF EXPRESSION AND REFORMATION—a. In General. A mistake of expression occurs where the parties are of the same mind regarding the terms of the agreement, but the writing intended to embrace those terms does not express their true meaning. Here in courts of law the contract must stand as it is written, for it is a well-settled rule of evidence in those courts that parol evidence is not admissible to contradict, add to, or vary a writing.⁶⁶ Equity, however, will relieve by restraining proceedings on the contract at law, or by rectifying or reforming it in accordance with the real intention of the parties,⁶⁷ or may cancel it;⁶⁸ and this either at the suit of the party or by way of defense to an action on the instrument.⁶⁹ The jurisdiction of equity to correct mistakes generally in contracts, so as to make them express the actual intent of the parties, is one of the ancient heads of the jurisdiction of courts of chancery.⁷⁰ Equity will not

Cancellation in part.—In one case it was held that where by mutual mistake matters were embraced in a contract which were not intended, equity would cancel such part and decree the performance of the rest. Hamilton v. McAlister, 49 S. C. 230, 27 S. E. 63.

Raguet*, 14 Minn. 273.

70. Henkleman v. Peterson, 154 Ill. 419, 40 N. E. 359. See REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Illustrations.—Mistakes of the following nature have been corrected in equity: Where an attorney in drawing a contract by mistake omitted an important provision (Waterman v. Dutton, 6 Wis. 265); a mistake made by a surveyor, by which a larger amount of land was contracted for than there was in reality (Gilmore v. Morgan, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 65; Jenks v. Fritz, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 201, 42 Am. Dec. 227); where a mortgage showed upon its face that by a scrivener's mistake the word "quarterly" was used instead of the word "annually" (Fowler v. Woodward, 26 Minn. 347, 4 N. W. 231); where a material, not simply a slight, mistake was made in the quantity of land conveyed (Read v. Cramer, 2 N. J. Eq. 277, 34 Am. Dec. 204; Paine v. Upton, 87 N. Y. 327, 41 Am. Rep. 371; Ladd v. Pleasants, 39 Tex. 415; Durham v. Legard, relieve when the mistake is not as to the contents of the instrument but as to its legal effect;⁷¹ where neither fraud, mistake, nor surprise is proved, and the contract is such as the parties designed it to be;⁷² where a deed is voluntary;⁷³ where the contract is illegal or relates to an illegal matter;⁷⁴ where the mistake was not mutual;⁷⁵ where the mistake arose from negligence;⁷⁶ where the correction is not asked for;⁷⁷ nor where the complaining party has been guilty of laches.⁷⁸ Where the mistake is obvious on the face of the writing the court may construe it according to the obvious intention.⁷⁹

b. Evidence Required. To establish mistake, the party alleging it must prove it clearly and satisfactorily, and perhaps beyond a reasonable doubt; at any rate a mere preponderance of evidence is not sufficient. The written instrument deliberately prepared and executed is evidence of the highest character, and will be presumed to express the intention of the parties to it, until the contrary appears

Upton*, 87 N. Y. 327, 41 Am. Rep. 371); where an instrument was void on account of a patent ambiguity (Campbell v. Johnson, 44 Mo. 247); where through mistake the whole of the premises was conveyed upon trusts, when the intention was to convey only one portion on trust and the remainder in fee simple (Kirk v. Zell, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 116); when there was a misdescription in a contract (Deford v. Mercer, 24 Iowa 118, 92 Am. Dec. 185); where a note was executed by mistake for too large an amount (Rigsbee v. Trees, 21 Ind. 227; Harrison v. Jameson, 3 J. J. Marsh. in the most satisfactory manner.⁸⁰ And there must always be express proof of the real intention of the parties.⁸¹ The power to reform instruments, it is said, is exercised by courts of equity with great caution, and never unless a proper case is made by the pleadings.⁸²

7. MISTAKE OF ONE PARTY ONLY—a. In General. A mistake of one of the parties only in the expression of his agreement or as to the subject-matter, not known to the other, does not affect its binding force,⁸³ and is no ground for its rescission even in equity,⁸⁴ unless it is such a mistake as to show that there is a complete difference in substance between what is supposed to be and what is taken, so as to constitute a failure of consideration. The principle of our law is the same as that of the civil law, and the difficulty in every case is to determine whether the mistake or misapprehension is as to the substance of the whole consideration, going, as it were, to the root of the matter, or only to some point, even though a material point, an error as to which does not affect the substance of the whole consideration.⁸⁵

b. As to Value, Quality, and Other Collateral Attributes. Where a purchaser or seller of any property, real or personal, buys or sells upon a mistaken idea of its nature, quality, or value, this mistake of one, unless induced by the other, does not affect the binding force of the agreement.⁸⁶ So where the mistake is as to some other collateral attribute of the agreement, as where a person thinking that another is insolvent buys his note,⁸⁷ or where a person through error in computations and neglecting to take into consideration certain features of the work offers to erect a building for too small a sum,⁸⁸ or where a station agent, on application of a shipper for the rate of freight, quotes, through a mistake in the instructions to him, a lower rate than the real rate.⁸⁹

c. In Motive or Expectation. A mistake of a party to an agreement relating to his motive or expectation has no effect on the agreement; as for example where a person agrees to purchase something under the mistaken belief that he needs it or that it will answer a purpose he has in view,⁹⁰ where one purchases a house under the mistaken belief that it is situated in a particular county, of which he wishes to become a freeholder,⁹¹ where one buys land in the unrealized expectation of procuring a consent which is required for building on it,⁹² where one takes a lease of land under the belief that there is a vein of coal in it,⁹³ where one applies for shares in a company under a mistaken belief that he requires them to qualify himself as a director,⁹⁴ or where one orders more of an article than he really needs.⁹⁵

d. Of One Party Caused by the Other. If a mistake on the part of one of the

as reduced in writing, although expressing the understanding of one party, did not express that of the other. In all the reported cases where there was not the element of mutual mistake, or mistake of one side with knowledge on the other, there was, in the language of Addison, 'some undue influence, misrepresentation, surprise, or abuse of confidence,' or the contract was so oppressive as to be unconscionable".

Specific performance.—A court of equity, however, will sometimes refuse specific performance of an agreement which it would not order rescinded. Specific performance being not a matter of strict right, if the defendant is able to prove a mistake which would make the enforcement of the agreement inequitable and oppressive, equity will refuse to enforce it and will leave the plaintiff to his action at law. *Western R. parties to an agreement is caused by the other, it may entitle him to avoid the contract on the ground of fraud.⁹⁶

e. Of One Party Known to the Other. One is not permitted to accept a promise which he knows that the other party understands in a different sense from that in which he understands it. In such a case there is no agreement,⁹⁷ although equity sometimes rectifies the contract so as to make it express the real intention.⁹⁸ The rule is different if the other party simply knows that the offerer is mistaken as to the value or quality of the subject-matter, or as to his expectations or motives.⁹⁹ Thus, as we shall see, it does not affect the agreement if the

S. 520, 29 Wkly. Rep. 311 (where it was said that a person cannot "snap at an offer" which he knows is made by mistake).

Illustrations.—This rule has been applied for example in a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell land, where the defendant, after having refused an offer from the plaintiff of £2,000, wrote him a letter containing an offer to sell for £1,200, whereas he intended to write £2,100, and the plaintiff accepted the offer (Webster v. Cecil, 30 Beav. 62); in an action for shucks furnished the government, where the plaintiff's bid for furnishing the same had been made on a blank furnished by the government, which, because of inadvertence in not striking out a word, required the government to pay sixty cents a pound, when shucks were only really worth two cents a pound, and were usually sold by the hundred weight (Hume v. U. S., 132 U. S. 406, 10 S. Ct. 134, 33 L. ed. 393); where by mistake in a rate sheet a railroad rate was given at fifteen dollars less than it should have been, and a person bought a ticket at that rate knowing of the mistake (Shelton v. Ellis, 70 Ga. 297); in a contract for the sale of goods, where the error was in failing to give the price which the seller had decided upon, the seller having had certain figures in mind which he intended to give, and having by a mere slip of the tongue, which the buyer understood to be such, given other figures (Harran v. Foley, 62 Wis. 584, 22 N. W. 837); where the vendor of land stated a price which was determined by footing incorrectly an itemized valuation of the property, and the buyer was looking upon the paper while he was making the addition, and knew of the miscalculation (Griffin v. O'Neil, 48 Kan. 117, 29 Pac. 143); and where plaintiff contracted with defendants for certain stone monuments for a sum fixed by one of defendants on information given him by their foreman, and on which he relied, and the price fixed was much below the value of the goods, through an error of the foreman in computation, known to plaintiff (Everson v. International Granite Co., 65 Vt. 658, 27 Atl. 320).

Equity will rescind an agreement which contains a vital mistake of one party known to the other. Rider v. Powell, 28 N. Y. 310; Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 11 S. Ct. 972, 999, 35 L. ed. 678; Webster v. Cecil, 30 Beav. 62. See Smith v. Mackin, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 41, where plaintiff had agreed in writing to surrender possession of certain real estate, supposing it to be a part only of that which was included in the description, and having discovered that the description covered the whole, brought an action to rescind the agreement. It was held maintainable. "The defendant," it was said, "knew how the fact was at the time the contract was made, and was also aware of the plaintiff's misapprehension in regard to it." The case was one where the defendant's conduct was unconscionable.

Estoppel.—Where a party places a construction on a proposed contract, agreeing to execute it in that way, and thereby induces the other to agree, he will be estopped from afterward repudiating that construction. Schmohl v. Fiddick, 34 Ill. App. 190; The Alberto, 24 Fed. 379.

Rep. 1059, where plaintiff sold defendant a quantity of oats, defendant thinking that they were old oats, and plaintiff knowing that he thought so and knowing that they were not. It was held that the sale was binding. But if defendant had thought they were old oats and that plaintiff

8. MUTUAL MISTAKE—a. As to Material Facts. Mutual mistake as to material facts will avoid the agreement.²

b. As to Extrinsic Facts. As to extrinsic facts which may have a bearing or influence on the making of an agreement, but which are not the cause of it, it seems that a mutual mistake does not affect the agreement. The agreement may be set aside for the mistake only where the point misconceived was the cause of the agreement or had an important influence upon it.³ The fact that both parties mistook the value of the subject-matter of the contract, so that one sold more of a thing or a more valuable thing than he thought he was selling, and the other got more than he expected to get, is immaterial to the case.⁴ And so it is was selling them as old oats, and plaintiff had known that defendant in making his offer thought he was being promised old oats, there would have been no contract, for it would be such a mistake and such a knowledge of the mistake as to fall under the general rule stated in the text. Rep. 479 (where, at the time of the sale of a house at auction, neither the vendor nor the vendee knew that the tenant in whose possession it was had been using it as a brothel, which fact, if publicly known in the neighborhood, would greatly reduce its value for the purpose of being let to tenants); Barr v. Gibson, 1 H. & H. 70, 7 L. J. Exch. 124, 3 M. & W. 390 (where on a sale of a ship at sea, both parties were ignorant that she was then in a damaged condition).

Conflicting cases.—In Sherwood v. Walker, 66 Mich. 568, 33 N. W. 919, 11 Am. St. Rep. 531, B sold to A a blooded cow for eighty dollars, both thinking that the cow was barren. Before the time for delivery B discovered that the cow was with calf and refused to deliver. As a breeder the cow was worth ten times the price it was sold for. It was held that the mistake avoided the sale. One judge dissented on the ground that the mistake went to the quality or value of the thing sold. In Chapman v. Cole, 12 Gray (Mass.) 141, 71 Am. Dec. 739, the plaintiff had paid the defendant, as worth fifty cents, a private gold coin really worth ten dollars, and it was held that the mistake was a ground for rescission. So in several cases where the mistake was as to the productiveness of land sold. Thwing v. Hall, etc., Lumber Co., 40 Minn. 184, 41 N. W. 815; Irwin generally as to all facts which are not of the essence of the agreement, the rule being that a mutual mistake as to these has no effect.⁵

c. When Facts Doubtful and Parties Assume Risk. Where the parties treat upon the basis that the fact which is the subject of the agreement is doubtful, and the consequent risk each is to encounter is taken into consideration in the stipulations assented to, the contract will be valid, notwithstanding any mistake of one of the parties.⁶

d. As to Terms of Agreement—(i) OFFER AND ACCEPTANCE NOT IDENTICAL. It has been seen that it is essential to every agreement that the parties to it should have consented to the same subject-matter in the same sense; they must have contracted ad idem.⁷ Hence where one person offers a thing and the other accepts it and the parties have in mind a different thing, there can be no agreement. So where the language used is understood differently by the parties, there is no meeting of minds and there can be no agreement.⁸ These cases may be classed under the head of mistake as to the identity of the subject-matter.

(ii) WHERE TERMS OF AGREEMENT ARE NOT AMBIGUOUS. The rule, how-

Signing wrong writings.—In a suit to recover the price of hogs sold by plaintiff to defendant, who refused to accept and pay for them, where the written contract showed that plaintiff bought the hogs of himself, and that defendant sold the same number of hogs to himself, each party having signed the writing the other should have executed, it was held that plaintiff could not recover. *Canterberry v. But see Croft v. Hanover F. Ins. Co., 40 W. Va. 508, 21 S. E. 854, 52 Am. St. Rep. 902.

Mistake as to quantity.—Where defendants inquired of plaintiff's agent the expense of transporting certain lath, and the agent inquired as to the quantity, to which defendants replied that there would be five hundred bundles, but the agent understood them to say one hundred, and gave them a price on that quantity, which price defendants ever, that both parties must assent to the same thing and in the same sense has no reference to the misconception of a party not authorized by the language used or by the terms of the agreement. If the agreement describes the subject-matter and the description does not admit of two meanings, the fact that one of the parties mistakenly thought that it was something else does not affect the contract.⁹

e. As to Existence of Subject-Matter—(1) IN GENERAL. Where certain facts assumed by both parties are the basis of a contract, and it subsequently appears that such facts did not exist, there is no agreement.¹⁰ Thus where parties agreed to pay, it was held that there was no contract, as the misunderstanding of the agent prevented the meeting of the minds of the parties. Hartford, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson, 24 Conn. 514, 63 Am. Dec. 177. And see Clay v. Ricketts, 66 Iowa 362, 23 N. W. 755; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Dawson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. 566.

Mistake as to price or consideration.—Where a seller of goods asked one hundred and sixty-five dollars for them, and the buyer accepted, thinking he asked sixty-five dollars, it was held that there was no agreement. Rupley v. Daggett, 74 Ill. 351. And see Mummenhoff v. Randall, 19 Ind. App. 44, 49 N. E. 40. So where plaintiff understood he was to sell and convey to defendant certain realty for a fixed sum, and certain personalty for an additional sum, equal to the fair value thereof, which was not named, but defendant understood that plaintiff was to convey to him both the real estate and personal property without any separate price or consideration for the personal property, it was held that the minds of the parties did not meet and there was no contract. Fullerton v. Dalton, 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 236.

Mistake as to time of payment.—Where, in negotiations for a sale, the vendor understood that the instalments were to be paid every thirty days, while the vendee understood that they were to be due every ninety days, it was held that there was no agreement, as the minds of the parties never met. Hogue v. Mackey, 44 Kan. 277, 24 Pac. 477.

Mistake as to identity of goods sold.—Where a person agreed to buy of another a cargo of cotton "to arrive ex Peerless from Bombay," and there were two ships of that name, and the seller meant one and the buyer the other, it was held that there was no agreement. Raffles v. Wichelhaus, 2 H. & C. 906, 33 L. J. Exch. 160.

Mistake as to identity of land.—Where a person agreed to purchase from another a lot of land in Prospect street, and there were two streets of that name in the town, and the vendor meant a lot on one of these streets and the purchaser meant a lot on the other, it was held that there was no agreement. Kyle v. Kavanaugh, 103 Mass. 356, 4 Am. Rep. 560. And see Strong v. Lane, 66 Minn. 94, 68 N. W. 765.

Mistake as to time.—Where, in negotiations for a sale, it was the understanding and intention of the seller that the sale should take effect on a certain day, and the understanding and intention of the purchaser that it should take effect on a different day, it was held that there was no contract for want of mutual assent. Pittsburg, etc., Coal Co. v. Slack, 42 La. Ann. 107, 7 So. 230.

Mistake in printed form of contract.—Where a contract with a building association was written on a blank form of a bond and mortgage ordinarily used by the association, which form contained different provisions from those agreed on, both parties believing that such form embodied the terms of the contract, and the contract as intended to be made was carried out for over a year, it was held that an insistence thereafter by the association that the mortgage and bond was the contract constituted fraud. Home Sav. Assoc. v. Noblesville Monthly Meeting, etc., (Ind. App. 1902) 64 N. E. 478.

Illustrations.—Thus, although, where a person agrees to buy cotton to arrive "ex Peerless from Bombay," and there are two ships of that name and the buyer means one and the seller another, there is no agreement (see supra, VI, B, 8, d, (1), note 8), if there is only one ship of that name, but one of the parties is thinking of a ship of a different name, the agreement is valid. Anson Contr. 130 [explaining Raffles v. Wichelhaus, 2 H. & C. 906, 33 L. J. Exch. 160]. So where a person makes an offer to another for car No. 5029 loaded with hay and the offeree accepts, and it afterward occurs to the offeree that he has made a mistake, and in looking up his books he discovers that he was thinking of car No. 5009 and intended to sell that, the contract is binding, for it matters not what the party thought; the law binds him to what he said.

Turner, 7 Exch. 208, 22 L. J. Exch. 115); where a creditor holding a policy of insurance on the life of his debtor surrendered the same to the company for a paid-up policy for a smaller sum, when the debtor, without the knowledge of either of the parties, was dead (Riegel v. American L. Ins. Co., 140 Pa. St.

A. 166); where there was a covenant in a lease by which a person undertook to dig from the premises not less than a certain number of tons of potter's clay annually, paying a certain royalty per ton, and it appeared that unknown to the parties there had never been so much clay under the land, the court saying: "Here both parties might well have supposed that there was clay under the land. They agree on the assumption that it is there; and the covenant is applicable only if there be clay" (Clifford v. Watts, L. R. 5 C. P. 577, 588, 40 L. J. C. P. 36, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717, 18 Wkly. Va. 297, 18 S. E. 493); where a person owning land in a certain town, to which place, as was supposed, the county-seat had been legally removed, conveyed for a nominal sum certain lands in the town to the county for a court-house, the enhancement of his other lands by reason of the supposed removal of the county-seat being the real consideration, and the supreme court subsequently held that the proceedings for the removal of the county-seat were void (Griffith v. Sebastian County, 49 Ark. 24, 3 S. W. 886); and where a creditor, being ignorant of the fact that his claim was secured, wrote to the other creditors of his debtor consenting to accept concurrently with them the surrender of property offered by the debtor on certain conditions, because he believed that he was in no better condition than such other creditors (Goodwin v. Perry, 25 La. Ann. 292).

contract under a mutual belief that a right exists which in fact does not exist, there is no agreement.¹² But, although every agreement must have a subject-matter to operate upon,¹³ the thing may have only a potential existence, as for example the unborn young of an animal¹⁴ or goods to be acquired or manufactured.¹⁵

(II) ABSOLUTE UNCONDITIONAL AGREEMENT. Where, however, there is an absolute, unconditional contract, or the contract concerns a matter about which there may be some doubt, and it appears that the existence of the thing was not an implied condition, but that the party intended to take the risk, then it is no answer to the enforcement of the agreement that the thing did not actually exist.¹⁶

12. "In the maxim (ignorance of the law excuses no one) the word jus is used in the sense of denoting general law, the ordinary law of the country. But when the word jus is used in the sense of denoting a private right, that maxim has no application. Private right of ownership is a matter of fact; it may be the result also of matter of law; but if parties contract under a mutual mistake, and misapprehension as to their relative and respective rights, the result is that that agreement is liable to be set aside as having proceeded upon a common mistake." Halsbury, Ch., in *Cooper v. Illustrations.—This rule has been applied for example where a person by imitating the signature of another induced third persons to supply him with goods, under a belief that they were supplying such other person, it being held that there was no contract of sale, "as between him and them there was merely the one side to a contract" (Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 App. Cas. 459, 47 L. J. Q. B. 481, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 573, 26 Wkly. Rep. 406); where the vendor in an executory contract of sale was led to believe by the person who negotiated the contract in behalf of the vendee that he was acting for a particular firm, whereas he was contracting for a corporation engaged in the same business, under the same name, the existence of which corporation was unknown to the vendor (Consumers' Ice Co. v. Webster, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 592, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 56); where one Gordon, the plaintiff, who was a notorious money-lender, issued an advertisement in the name of "Addison," and the defendant borrowed money from him in that name, giving a note for a larger amount than borrowed, and upon discovering the deception repudiated the transaction and offered to repay the amount borrowed, and in the action on the note the jury found that plaintiff had intentionally concealed from defendant the fact that he was Gordon in order to induce him to borrow money from him, that defendant was so induced, and that he contracted with "Addison" believing him to be a money-lender of that name (Gordon v. Street, [1899] 2 Q. B. 641, 69 L. J. Q. B. 45, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237, 48 Wkly. Rep. 158); where certain persons, as brokers, entered into a contract for the purchase of bonds for another, claiming to act for an undisclosed principal, and stipulating that they should in no manner be held liable on the contract, which, as they had reason to believe, was made by the other party under a misapprehension as to the value of the bonds, when in fact they were acting for themselves, and there was no other principal, it being held that they could not maintain an action on the contract (Paine v. Loeb, 96 Fed. 164, 37 C. C. A. 434); where S, being W's agent to sell a pair of oxen, concealed his agency in the negotiations for the sale of them to H, and in answer to H's inquiry made representations intending to induce H to believe that they were the property of S himself and not of W, and agreed that H might drive them home, and that he would give H a bill of sale for them the next day, and that H might drive them back if he did not find them as S had told him, and H drove them home, and, discovering the same evening that W claimed to own them and that they had never been the property of S, for that reason drove them back the next morning and refused to take the bill of sale; it being held in the action by W against H for the price of the oxen, that it should have been left to the jury to determine, under all the circumstances, whether the minds of the parties really met, and if so what the contract was (Winchester v. Howard, 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93); and where a person doing business under the name of Committee of Distribution, through his agent obtained another's order for certain books, falsely representing and inducing the other to believe that he was purchasing books from a com-

another,¹⁹ there is no agreement. One who enters into an agreement has a right to know with whom he is agreeing, and when a person intends to contract with another he cannot be compelled to accept a third person as the other party to the contract.²⁰

9. MISTAKE OF LAW — a. General Rule. It is laid down in general language in many cases that a mistake, in order that it may affect a contract, must be a mistake of fact, and that a mere mistake of law will not affect the enforceability of an agreement; and this is well settled as a general rule,²¹ not only at law but also mittee of the United States congress, that the books could be obtained only on the recommendation of a congressman, and that he had been recommended by the congressman of his district (Barcus v. Dorries, 64 N. Y. App. Div. 109, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 695).

Illustrations.—This rule has been applied where after A had succeeded to the business of B, with whom C had been accustomed to deal, C sent an order to B, which was accepted by A without any notification of the change, it being held that A could not recover the price of the goods so sold (Boulton v. Jones, 2 H. & N. 564, 3 Jur. N. S. 1156, 27 L. J. Exch. 117, 6 Wkly. Rep. 107); where A who had purchased ice from B under a contract, becoming dissatisfied, terminated that contract and made a new contract for ice with C, and B afterward bought C's business and delivered ice to A, who had no notice or knowledge of the purchase until after the ice was delivered and used, it being held that B could not recover for the ice from A (Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9); and where A being indebted to B for labor on a model of an appliance, told B that he was being backed by a member of a firm in the coal business, and that he would cause the firm to furnish B a ton of coal for application on his indebtedness, and notified the firm that B wanted a ton of coal, without stating the arrangement made with B, and the coal was delivered and charged by the firm to B, who used it and credited its value on A's account, it being held that B was not liable for the price (Concord Coal Co. v. Ferrin, 71 N. H. 331, 51 Atl. 283).

Change in law by change in decision of supreme court.—Contracts made on the faith of the law as enunciated in a decision of a court of last resort, in the absence of fraud, misrepresentation, or want of knowledge of all the facts, will not be set aside because of a subsequent decision by the same court overruling the former one. *Pittsburgh, etc., Iron Co. v. Arkansas.—Rector v. Collins, 46 Ark. 167, 55 Am. Rep. 571, holding that the maker of a note, who had paid interest at more than the legal rate after maturity, under a mistake as to the legal effect of a phrase used in the note, could not recover it back.

b. Exceptions—(1) IN GENERAL. To the general rule that mistake of law is no ground for relief there are certain exceptions or apparent exceptions. Mistake as to particular private rights is treated as mistake of fact or as a mixed mistake of law and fact.²⁷ Private rights of property, although they are the result of rules of law, or depend upon rules of law applied to the construction of legal instruments, are usually considered matters of fact.²⁸ It is said that courts in cases of peculiar hardship have distinguished between ignorance of the existence of a law and of its legal effect.²⁹ And it is held that where one, through a mistake of the law, acknowledges himself under an obligation which the law will

West Virginia.—Beard v. Beard, 25 W. Va. 486, 52 Am. Rep. 219, holding that where a defendant, after suit brought, voluntarily paid a part of the demand, and a decree was afterward rendered for the residue, which on appeal was reversed, he could not recover the part so paid, as it was paid under a mistake of law.

Wisconsin.—Birkhauser v. Schmitt, 45 Wis. 316, 30 Am. Rep. 740. In this case the plaintiff, proposing to buy of defendant his interest in certain lands, was informed of all the facts affecting the title, but an attorney acting for both parties, upon consideration of those facts, advised them that defendant had a certain interest in the lands. Plaintiff acting upon that advice purchased the supposed interest. This advice being incorrect, it was held that the mistake was one of law only, and that plaintiff could not recover the purchase-money.

Rep. 476, where an administrator sold land, both he and the purchaser believing that it was the fee that he was selling, and it turned out that nothing passed but the equity of redemption. It was held a mutual mistake of law and fact entitling the purchaser to relief.

not impose upon him he shall not be bound thereby.³⁰ And where the mistake of law is mutual, equity will sometimes relieve on the ground of surprise.³¹ And if the party can be relieved without injustice to the other, equity will do so, especially where the party to be benefited by the mistake invokes the aid of equity to put him in a position where he may profit by the mistake.³²

(II) FRAUD, UNDUE INFLUENCE, AND ABUSE OF CONFIDENCE. It is well settled that a contract will not be enforced in equity when a mistake of law of one of the parties is induced by fraud, imposition, undue influence, or an abuse of confidence springing out of the peculiar relations existing between the parties. In such cases the general rule that mistake of law is no ground for relief does not apply, for there is something more than this.³³

(III) FOREIGN LAWS. The rule that mistake of law is no ground for relief does not apply where the mistake is as to the law of a foreign country or a sister state. Such a mistake is regarded as a mistake of fact and not of law.³⁴

10. REMEDIES. If a contract is still executory, the party complaining of a mistake avoiding the same may repudiate the contract and set up the mistake as a defense in an action at law or a suit in equity brought against him to enforce the contract or recover damages for its breach,³⁵ or he may obtain relief in equity, material,⁴³ of fact and not of law,⁴⁴ and not due to the complainant's negligence;⁴⁵ and the complainant must show injury.⁴⁶

C. Misrepresentation Without Fraud — 1. IN GENERAL — a. At Law. As a general rule a naked misrepresentation of fact, that is, an innocent misrepresentation or non-disclosure of fact, does not affect the validity of an agreement, unless (1) it belongs to a special class of agreements in which the utmost good faith and accuracy of statement is required, or (2) is between persons in fiduciary or confidential relations, or (3) unless the representation is a condition in the contract or amounts to a warranty. Except in these cases, a misrepresentation has no effect at common law unless it is made with knowledge that it is false, or recklessly and without belief in its truth, so as to render it fraudulent.⁴⁷

b. In Equity. Innocent misrepresentation, however, may be ground for relief in a court of equity. Thus an innocent misrepresentation has frequently been held ground for resisting a suit for specific performance.⁴⁸ And it has likewise been held in a number of cases that an innocent misrepresentation of a material fact is ground for rescinding or canceling a contract in equity.⁴⁹ And an innocent and he refused to take the lease. It was held that specific performance would not be granted. The court said: "If the representation was made, and if that representation has not been and cannot be fulfilled, it appears to me upon all the authorities, that that is a perfectly good defence in a suit for specific performance, if it is proved in point of fact that the representation so made has not been fulfilled." misrepresentation of a material fact is ground for rescinding or reforming the contract in equity on the ground of mistake.⁵⁰

2. CONTRACTS OF A SPECIAL NATURE — a. In General. To the general rule that innocent misrepresentations do not affect the validity of an agreement, there are exceptions in the case of certain special contracts, sometimes said to be uberrimæ fidei, which are of such a character that one of the parties must rely on the other for his knowledge of facts, and in which therefore the most perfect good faith is required, so that they may be avoided for any material misstatement or non-disclosure of facts, even though innocent.⁵¹

b. Particular Contracts. In England, and in most of the United States, contracts of insurance are of a special nature, within this rule, so that an innocent misrepresentation or concealment of material facts will avoid the policy.⁵² The ordinary contract of suretyship or guaranty does not fall within the exception.⁵³ In England contracts for the purchase of shares in corporations are considered within this special class, so that innocent misrepresentation will avoid the contract,⁵⁴ but this exception is not recognized in the United States.⁵⁵ In England contracts for the sale of land fall within this special class,⁵⁶ but the decisions in the United States do not distinguish between sales of personalty and sales of land in this respect, and neither are regarded as within the exception.⁵⁷

3. PARTIES IN FIDUCIARY OR CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS. The rule that an innocent misrepresentation of fact does not furnish ground for avoiding a contract does not apply where there is a special fiduciary or confidential relation between the parties, as between principal and agent, attorney and client, trustee and cestui que trust, guardian and ward, parent and child, and in other cases in which a special relation of confidence exists.⁵⁸

4. TERMS OR CONDITIONS IN CONTRACT. If the matter innocently misrepresented is a term or condition in the contract, or if the party has warranted it to be true, its falsity does not affect the formation of the contract; but it operates to discharge the other party from his obligation or to give him a right of action ex contractu for the damages which he has sustained by the breach.⁵⁹

5. ESTOPPEL. The liability which is created by estoppel is to be distinguished from the cases in which innocent misrepresentation gives rise to a liability in damages. Where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time.⁶⁰

6. REMEDIES. The test of fraud as opposed to misrepresentation is that the former does, and the latter does not, give rise to an action ex delicto.⁶¹ Therefore mere representation, although false and material, if not knowingly false, so as to

So, in Wolcott v. Mount, 38 N. J. L. 496, 20 Atl. 425, where a person sold another a quantity of seed as "early strap leaf red top," honestly believing it to be so, and the seed on being planted turned out to be of a different and inferior kind, whereby the purchaser lost his crop, it was held that the seller was liable in damages, as the representation was a warranty.

constitute fraud, will not support an action for damages,⁶² unless it is a term or condition in the contract, or the parties stand in a fiduciary relation.⁶³ In contracts uberrimæ fidei, in which innocent misrepresentation avoids the contract, such a misrepresentation may be set up as a defense to defeat an action at law on the contract.⁶⁴ The same is true where the parties occupied a fiduciary or confidential relation.⁶⁵ And as we have seen an innocent misrepresentation may be ground for rescinding or reforming a contract in equity, or for refusing to compel specific performance.⁶⁶

D. Fraud—1. DEFINITION. Fraud is a false representation of fact, made with a knowledge of its falsehood, or recklessly, without belief in its truth, with the intention that it should be acted upon by the complaining party, and actually inducing him to act upon it to his damage.⁶⁷ It differs from mere misrepresentation in that it has the element of knowledge;⁶⁸ and its most frequent example in the law of contracts is the making of false representations to induce consent to an agreement.⁶⁹

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES FRAUD⁷⁰—a. In General. It may be laid down as a general rule that any false representation of a material fact, made with knowledge of its falsity, and with intent that it shall be acted upon by another in entering into a contract, and which is so acted upon, constitutes fraud, and will entitle the party deceived thereby to avoid the contract or to maintain an action for the damages sustained.⁷¹ A literal speaking of the truth, if intended to accomplish a fraud, may be as fraudulent as a falsehood.⁷² It has been recently held in England that where a document containing a number of statements intentionally gives a false impression as a whole, upon which persons are induced to act, it is in a legal sense false and fraudulent, although no specific statement contained therein considered by itself may be proved to be false.⁷³ False representations, not sufficient to sustain an indictment for false pretenses, may be sufficient to vitiate a contract thereby obtained.⁷⁴

b. Failure to Disclose Facts—(1) IN GENERAL. As a general rule the mere failure of a party to a contract to disclose facts is not such fraud as will entitle the other party to avoid the contract.⁷⁵ There must be a positive misstatement of fact or such a partial and fragmentary statement of fact that the withholding of that which is not stated makes that which is stated absolutely false,⁷⁶ or the relationship of the parties must be such that the fullest disclosure is called for, or there must be a duty on the party to disclose what he knows on the subject.⁷⁷

(II) ACTIVE CONCEALMENT OR NON-DISCLOSURE. The rule that non-disclosure of facts does not constitute fraud does not apply where there is an active concealment of facts. This is a fraud. By an active concealment is meant either (1) a representation good as far as it goes, but accompanied with such a suppression of facts as makes it convey a misleading impression,⁷⁸ or (2) an attempt by one party

Lease of premises.—It has been held for example that it is not fraud for the lessor of premises to fail to disclose the fact that they are in a ruinous condition and unfit for habitation, although he may know that they are required by the lessee for immediate occupation. Keates v. Cadogan, 10 C. B. 591, 600, 15 Jur. 428, 20 L. J. C. P. 76, 70 E. C. L. 591. "It is not pretended," said the court in this case, "that there was any warranty, express or implied, that the house was fit for immediate occupation; but it is said, that, because the defendant knew that the plaintiff wanted it for immediate occupation, and knew that it was in an unfit and dangerous state, and did not disclose that fact to the plaintiff, an action of deceit will lie. The declaration does not allege that the defendant made any misrepresentation, or that he had reason to suppose that the plaintiff would not do what any man in his senses would do, viz. make proper investigation, and satisfy himself as to the condition of the house before he entered upon the occupation of it. There is nothing amounting to deceit." See also Fisher v. Lighthall, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 82, 54 Am. Rep. 258; Lucas v. Coulter, 104 Ind. 81, 3 N. E. 622; Foster v. Peyser, 9 Cush. Sale of land.—Failure of the purchaser of land to disclose to the vendor the fact that there is mineral under the land does not amount to fraud, where there is no special relation of confidence. Smith v. Beatty, 37 N. C. 456, 40 Am. Dec. 435; Butler's Appeal, 26 Pa. St. 63; Harris v. Tyson, 24 Pa. St. 347, 64 Am. Dec. 661; Fox v. Mackreth, 2 Bro. Ch. 400, 29 Eng. Reprint 224. As to concealment by the purchaser of land see also Neill v. Shamburg, 158 Pa. St. 263, 27 Atl. 992. And see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Failure to disclose insolvency.—It has repeatedly been held that a purchaser of goods on credit is under no duty to disclose his financial condition, if no inquiry is made by the seller, and that mere failure to disclose the fact that he is insolvent is not such fraud as will entitle the seller to rescind.

St. Rep. 410, where it was said: "In order to establish a case of false representation, it is not necessary that something which is false should have been stated as if it were true. If the presentation of that which is true creates an impression which is false, it is, as to

to draw the other's attention from a fact or to cover it from view.⁷⁹ In the first case the non-disclosure has the effect of either impliedly representing that the fact concealed does not exist or of rendering the facts disclosed absolutely false. In the second case the conduct of the party, outside of an actual representation, is a fraud on the other.⁸⁰

(III) WHERE THERE IS A DUTY TO DISCLOSE. The rule that failure to disclose facts is not fraud does not apply where the circumstances are such as to impose a duty to disclose them; and there is such a duty where the parties stand in a fiduciary relationship to each other,⁸¹ or where one party knows that the other

Illustrations.—This rule has been applied where the purchaser of a life-interest having obtained medical reports upon the life showed the vendor the unfavorable reports and suppressed the favorable ones (Boswell v. Coaks, 27 Ch. D. 424 [reversed in 11 App. Cas. 232, 55 L. J. Ch. 761, 55 L. T. Rep. N. S. 321]); when a debtor obtained a composition by not disclosing that he had recently come into property by the death of his father, whom he represented as refusing to help him (Gilbert v. Endean, 9 Ch. D. 259, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 404, 27 Wkly. Rep. 252); where the defendant, being desirous of purchasing certain stock from the plaintiff, of the value of which he knew she was ignorant, for the purpose of misleading her and inducing her to sell the stock at less than its face value, told her of a fact calculated in itself to depreciate the value of the stock, but omitted to disclose other facts within his knowledge which would have given her correct information of such value (Mallory v. Leach, 35 Vt. 156, 82 Am. Dec. 625); where a purchaser of goods on credit, on being questioned as to his financial condition, states his assets correctly, but does not disclose all his liabilities (Newell v. Randall, 32 Minn. 171, 19 N. W. 972, 5 Am. Rep. 562; Childs v. Merrill, 63 Vt. 463, 22 Atl. 626, 14 L. R. A. 264); and where the promoter of a corporation represented to one, as an inducement to his subscription to the capital stock, that a certain person of reputation for business sagacity had agreed to subscribe for a large amount of the stock, without disclosing the fact that the stock had been given such person as a gratuity for the use of his name (Coles v. Kennedy, 81 Iowa 360, 40 N. W. 1088, 25 Am. St. Rep. 503).

Illustrations.—This rule has been applied where a person sold a vessel with all faults, and before the sale had taken her from the ways on which she lay and placed her afloat in a dock for the purpose of preventing an examination of the bottom, which he knew to be unsound (Schneider v. Heath, 3 Campb. 506, 14 Rev. Rep. 506); where a person in order to sell a log of mahogany turned it so as to conceal a hole in the underneath side (Udell v. Atherton, 7 H. & N. 172, 7 Jur. N. S. 777, 30 L. J. Exch. 337, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 797); and where defendant in payment of a horse delivered bank-bills to plaintiff, which were known to defendant to be worthless at the time and unknown to plaintiff, with an agreement that if the notes were not returned in a given time, defendant should not be bound to receive them, it being held that this was a fraud, and that plaintiff had a right to recover the value of the horse, although he did not return the notes within the time limited (*Smith v. relies on him to tell him truly as to the facts of the case, in which case a duty arises not to conceal anything material to the bargain, and this, although the parties do not stand in what is generally described as a fiduciary relation.⁸² Thus in sales of personal property, the seller is bound to disclose material latent defects known to him, both as to title and quality.⁸³ And the owner of land must disclose defects in the title or other defects peculiarly within his knowledge and presumably unknown to the purchaser.⁸⁴ As a general rule, however, a purchaser

—Where one party to a contract acts with full knowledge as to his own property as well as the other property for which he is bargaining, while the other party, on account of non-residence, can scarcely be said to know his own property, and knows nothing whatever of the property he is trading for, the first is held to the strictest and fullest disclosures.

of property is under no duty to disclose a fact which, unknown to the other party, increases the value of the property.⁸⁵ In like manner the mere silence of the seller of property, when the buyer is exaggerating its value or quality, is not a fraud.⁸⁶

c. Representation of Opinion. As a rule a mere representation of opinion, although erroneous, is not a fraud against which the law will relieve.⁸⁷ Expressions of opinion by the vendor of property, relative to the title, the quantity, or the value, etc., if they do not amount to a misstatement of matters of fact will not, although the opinion is erroneous or ill founded, entitle the purchaser to relief on the ground of fraud.⁸⁸ As a general rule the mere assertion that prop-

N. 1154, holding that in an action to enforce a written contract contemplating the organization of a corporation for the manufacture and sale of a harrow, representations by plaintiff to defendants at the time the contract was made that the harrow could be put on the market at a certain price per section were as to future possibilities and not present facts, and hence were not fraudulent misrepresentations vitiating the contract.

Rep. 911, where the directors of a company, in a prospectus inviting subscriptions for debentures to be issued by the company, falsely stated that the objects of the issue were to complete alterations in the buildings of the company, to purchase horses and vans, and to develop the trade of the company, when the real object was to raise money to pay off pressing liabilities. Cotton, L. J., said: "It was argued that this was only the statement of an intention, and that the mere fact that an intention was not carried into effect could not make the defendants liable to the plaintiff. I agree that it was a statement of intention, but it is nevertheless a statement of fact." Bowen, L. J., concurring, said: "A mere suggestion of possible purposes to which a portion of the money might be applied would not have formed a basis for an action of deceit. There must be a misstatement of an existing fact: but the state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion. It is true that it is very difficult to prove what the state of a man's mind at a particular time is, but if it can be ascertained it is as much a fact as anything else. A misrepresentation as to the state of a man's mind is, therefore, a misstatement of fact." See also Old Colony Trust Co. v. Dubuque Light, etc., Co., 89 Fed. 794, holding that a statement by the purchaser of a street railroad that in carrying out its plan of reorganization it intended to and would place the line in first-class condition, made to the owners of another line to induce a consolidation of the two, was not only a promise, but also a representation of an existing fact as to its intention, which authorized a rescission of the contract of consolidation by the other parties, where the promise was not only not fulfilled, but it was shown that the promisor had no such intention at the time.

e. Representation of Law. As a rule false representation, to constitute fraud, must be a representation of fact, and an erroneous representation or statement of a matter of law is not a fraud.⁹⁸ False representations as to the legal effect of an instrument are no bar to an action thereon, as a party signing such an instrument is presumed to know its contents, and has no right to rely upon the representations of the other party as to its legal effect.⁹⁹ The rule does not apply, however, when there is a relation of trust or confidence between the parties, or the representation is made to a person who is unable to judge of the true character and effect of the contract.¹ As has been pointed out ignorance of foreign laws, which Indiana.—Lamb v. Lamb, 130 Ind. 273, 275, 30 N. E. 36, 30 Am. St. Rep. 227, where a man with personality of the value of forty thousand dollars falsely represented to a woman whom he was about to marry, and over whom he had acquired complete influence, the effect of a marriage settlement by which she released all of her rights in his estate and became entitled to receive therefrom the mere sum of two hundred dollars, the man having taken the woman to his own legal adviser, who said the instrument was all right. It was held that the rule that a false representation as to the legal effect of a written instrument will not entitle the person deceived to relief had no application. "If the only fraud," said the court, "was in mis-include the laws of a sister state, is regarded as ignorance of fact and not of law, and misrepresentation in regard thereto is misrepresentation of fact.² And if the representation, although involving a matter of law, can be resolved into a representation of fact, it will be treated as a representation of fact instead of law.³

f. Fraud of Third Party Inducing Contract. A contract cannot be set aside because of the fraud of a third person, in which the other party to the contract was not implicated.⁴ In other words the representation must be made by the other party to the contract or by his agent or with his command or consent,⁵ or must be subsequently ratified by him.⁶

g. Knowledge and Intent—(1) KNOWLEDGE OF FALSITY OF REPRESENTATION—(A) In General. In order that a false representation may amount to fraud, it must be made with knowledge of its falsity, or with what is equivalent to such knowledge. A representation made with a belief in its truth, although not true in point of fact, is not as a rule a legal fraud,⁷ although as we have seen if representing the legal effect of the written contract, there could be no recovery in this case unless the situation and relationship of the parties are such as to take the case out of the ordinary rule. It is established law that where parties deal at arms-length in respect to ordinary business matters, the false representation of the legal effect of a written instrument will not constitute fraud. . . . The question here is whether the rule extends over a case where parties occupy a relationship such as that which existed between the appellant and the appellee. We think it clear that it does not."

But still we must recollect, that the principle which I have mentioned is always applied ad hominem. He who is guilty of a fraud shall never be permitted to avail himself of it; and if a contract founded in fraud be questioned between the parties to that contract, I agree, that as against the person who has committed the fraud, and who endeavors to avail himself of it, the contract shall be considered as null and void. the representation is of a material fact and induces the contract, it is in some cases, even when innocently made, a good ground for setting aside the contract.⁸ Fraud is proved when it is shown that a false representation has been made (1) with knowledge of its falsity, (2) without belief in its truth, or (3) recklessly, and regardless of whether it be true or false. The second and third cases, as has been well said, are really the same, for one who makes a statement under the conditions last mentioned can have no real belief in the truth of what he states.⁹

(B) Representation Not Believed to Be True. If persons take upon themselves to make assertions as to which they are ignorant whether they are true or untrue they must, in a civil point of view, be held as responsible as if they had asserted that which they knew to be untrue.¹⁰ Whether a party misrepresenting a fact knew it to be false, or made the assertion without knowing whether it was true or false, is wholly immaterial; for the affirmation of what one does not know or believe to be true is equally, in morals and law, as unjustifiable as the affirmation of what is known to be positively false.¹¹ Where a party makes a misrepres-

Illustrations.—Where two persons in a bank, upon treaty with an incoming partner, joined in presenting to him a false statement of the affairs of the bank, by which he was induced to become a partner, and the statement was false to the knowledge of one of them, who was acquainted with the affairs of the bank, but not to the knowledge of the other, who joined in it in reliance upon his partner, it was held that the incoming partner was entitled to rescind the contract and to claim restitution against both partners. As regards the innocent partner, it was explained to be at least a representation of a fact of which he knew nothing whatever, whether it was true or not, and it was said in substance that if, on the treaty for a purchase, one party makes a representation, he cannot be afterward heard to say that he knew nothing about the matter; nor can he be allowed to retain any benefit which he might have acquired from the representation which he has made. *Rawlins v.
